THE PUBLISHER SPEAKS

The fifteenth edition of a successful book is likely to become stereotyped and dehumanized. Editors too institutionalized are prone to get out of touch. The tree itself, missing the spring-time flow of sap, dies out at the top. This guide book for parents has come to be so much used as an essential desk tool by educational executives, and as a reference book wherever books are kept, that there is always danger that its original purpose, a guide for parents, may be lost sight of.

For nearly twenty years, up to the outbreak of the war, I had been dealing with the boy product of the best private schools. Impressed with the blind way in which fathers and mothers made their choice of schools it seemed to me that a guide book for parents was needed. Little enough I knew about schools at that time, but I had been trained as a scientist to collect, weigh and compare evidence and moreover in the previous ten years I had been five times around the world studying other peoples and their customs, getting into the skins of men, white, yellow and brown, and looking out through their eye holes.

To the schools and school masters I endeavored to apply both the methods of comparative anatomy and of the student and interpreter of races and civilizations. There were some schools who at once made it felt that in the publication of anything about them I was invading upon their sacredly guarded privacy. Others even after some years continued to feel that anything put into print about the personalities that had made or dominated the school was not fitting. They were willing enough to have the beauty of their grounds or even their unrealized aims and ideals exploited but they failed to appreciate my desire to inform the parent of the personalities behind the enterprise and out of what they had come. But the idea of such a year book was welcomed at once by all the better schools and fortunately the nestors of the profession offered aid and comfort. Soon schools were coming with questions for help, believing that here was to be found a comparative view that would be of value.

Parents, interested to know of a source of knowledge and discernment, came or wrote in increasing numbers seeking more intimate information than had been put in print. So quite unpremeditatedly and only to meet definite needs and demands there grew up a series of services and an organization of fifty trained people occupying two floors and twenty-five rooms on the top of Beacon Hill.

This Handbook, too, has grown from a first edition of five hundred pages to some three thousand pages published under three titles. In the earlier editions summer camps were included in this Handbook, but for the past eight years an eight to nine hundred page Handbook of SUMMER CAMPS has been published annually. In 1930, for the first time, information of special interest to private school people was separated from this Handbook and published as a Handbook for PRIVATE SCHOOL TEACHERS, a new and revised edition of which is in preparation.

These red bound books are a small part of the annual printed product that has come out of the first edition of this Handbook. Best known to private school people is Private School News which has just celebrated its 7th birthday. Starting as a two page sheet it has grown to a monthly publication of sixteen pages and cover, and has become indispensable to private school executives everywhere.

This Handbook having given birth to these pups is better ready to serve its original purpose, a guide for parents. It should aid them to an intelligent and discriminating choice, the selection of the school environment to which their particular boy or girl will respond most beneficially, which will stimulate the most healthful all-round growth and development and the establishment of the best habits,—moral, physical and intellectual. Such a guide to perform its function must have some breadth of view, must open up broader horizons and distant vistas and inspire some hope for the future.

Merely to list schools in the order of their wealth, their social snobbishness, or of the approbation given them by colleges and universities who look upon them favorably because of their servility to the academic dead hand, would be a poor and inadequate service to the parents and advisers of the coming generation.

To present critically and appreciatively the personalities that have made and still dominate the school is the first purpose. An interpretation of the psychological slants and attitudes, the prejudices or principles of those who control, with reference to their outlook on the developing adolescent, is an added and still more difficult thing today. Even after fifteen years some head masters and head mistresses have failed to appreciate that in the case of their own school their puffery and pollyanna optimism toward the things close at hand may not be substituted for this critical attitude.

The better schools are offered an opportunity to present in the back of the book in condensed form such statements as they may feel justified in circulating in the form of catalogs and bulletins to their prospective patrons. These the schools to whom the privilege is extended are permitted to pay for.

The introductory chapters, changing from year to year, reflect the educational trends of the time in the private school stratum of the American people. They constitute a moving picture of the passing show seen in perspective. We detect in what we once thought great drama the follies of the times. The more general review of education and its literature, once the province of these chapters, is reserved for the Handbook of PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEMS, now in preparation. Here are presented certain points of view that may be helpful to the parent in comparing, interpreting and deciding upon schools for his children. The private school,—the need, importance and function, what lies behind it, its varieties and types, its future possibilities,—all these we hope to bring out from time to time.

In the review of recent books we seek to present chiefly new thoughts and new ideas which shall be stimulating to those who are fundamentally interested in the possibilities of education not merely as it is, but as it may be, not merely for their own children, but for the improvement of the race. The purpose has been to reveal what the greatest thinkers are thinking.

In short, the one purpose of this Handbook is to bring together available and useful knowledge of trustworthy character on the best ideas and facilities that exist for the greatest advancement of our own favored children. With the necessary data interpretations may be more discerning, discriminations more meticulous, horizons broader, out of vision may come inspiration, and more extended views may lead to brighter futures.

Moreover the fifteen editions of this Handbook constitute by far the largest body of printed matter on the Private School in America. In a conspicuous red binding, these Handbooks are widely distributed and widely known. Their sale to parents and through bookstores is evidence that parents need and appreciate such a guide. When the first edition of this Handbook was published fifteen years ago the Private Schools were not known to the public nor to each other. Today they are more prosperous, more vital than ever before and the professional bonds between private school people and other educators are daily strengthening.

Moreover the Private Schools better understand their function and more boldly assume it. The Private Schools of America are generally recognized as playing as vital a part today as have the Public Schools of England in the last century.

THE EDITOR EXPLAINS

This 15th Edition has been entirely reset in new type and printed in a new plant. The tens of thousands of changes essential each year have always made it impossible to electrotypes or plate this book. In the earlier editions much of the monotype was held over from year to year and the necessary changes with the cancellations of the obsolete material and the introduction of new, were made in standing type. This is no longer the practice.

That the Handbook has to be reset in new type every year is only another indication of the changeful vitality of the private school today. This year there are perhaps a lesser number of schools opened for the first time to be reported and there are a greater number than usual omitted because of their discontinuance. Nor is this to be deplored, for clearing the ground of some of the weaker schools may well be appropriate preparation for greener growth and more vigorous development a little later.

Collecting, arranging and editing this detailed information on the private schools occupies the entire time of a staff twelve months in the year as well as the attention of a much larger editorial staff part of each year. Questionnaires are the bane of most school people and naturally bring too little or inadequate response. Contacts are maintained and information secured in many collateral ways,—through direct visits to schools by members of the staff, visits of school people to our offices, reports of parents and pupils recommended or sent to the schools; through teachers who use our placement service, through trustees and donors who consult us, as well as through the more usual methods of studying everything that is put in type either by or about the schools.

In securing information from schools by mail a questionnaire, frequently unanswered, asks a report on facts and figures,—enrollment, faculty, rates, courses, college entrants, and endowment. In the statistical bold-face type holes will be found where statistical information was not supplied. Some schools, it will be observed, are particularly holey. Mundane parents will be more interested in those that are not.

In the Supplementary List of Secondary Schools, pages 893-978, are given schools of which little is known or whose continued existence may be doubtful. The Classified Lists, pages 979-1056, elaborated and worked over each year, are planned to assist parents in finding schools within certain age limits or tuition ranges, or offering special courses and opportunities.

A circular sent the schools explains the "Editorial Policy" in part as follows:

"Correct information and data of every kind is invited . . . we endeavor to give just the information that a parent wants to know and information of a kind that the directors or heads cannot convincingly impart themselves . . . in no case do we print verbatim in the critical text of the Handbook notices as sent in by the school . . . in order to preserve the individuality of these books and their influence with parents for whom they serve as guides, the text is written by our editorial department with reports before them from many sources in regard to every school . . . proofs of this critical text are not submitted to the schools except for correction of fact . . . in writing the notices of each school the first endeavor of the editor is to print something of the history, traditions, atmosphere, etc , truthfully . . . then to tell about the personalities who have made the institution what it is . . . letters, circulars, copies of catalogs, general information also photographs, snapshots,—anything that will help to reveal the value of the work the schools are doing as intimately as possible to parents who use these books and call upon us for information,—is welcomed and appreciated."

ADVISORY SERVICE FOR PARENTS

When this Handbook was first published as a guide for parents under the title THE BEST PRIVATE SCHOOLS there was no thought of establishing an advisory service. But parents getting hold of the book felt Mr. Sargent knew more and came to him in person or by letter for advice about just the right school for their particular boy or girl. With hundreds coming, organization was required to take care of them. With the second edition, 1916, the need of this service became evident. A prominent head master wrote: "I see already a great increase in my correspondence as a result, I think, of the very flattering notice in your book." Another wrote "Your book brought us a very desirable pupil this year."

Some misguided executives offered liberal commissions for such enrollments. To prevent any misunderstanding it was immediately made clear that this office would not and has never yet accepted any fee or commission from a school resulting from enrollments on our recommendation.

Consequently we are free to render unprejudiced advice and place the boy or girl where we believe conditions are most favorable. In interviewing and corresponding with parents seven members of the staff now assist, each in his own field,—boys, girls, special schools, summer camps.

During the past twelve months something over 1300 families have appealed to Mr. Sargent for assistance in finding the right school or summer camp or in solving problems connected with the education or future of their children.

Where the conditions are clearly stated such inquiries are easily and promptly answered but often the parent faces a real problem which requires an intimate understanding of the boy or girl and the home, and a careful study of the whole problem. Parents and others interested in the selection of a school are invited to write Mr. Sargent about their educational problems.

Schools, too, turn over to him for re-placement pupils they cannot accept or who have proved misfits in their schools. With the cooperation of specialists, many boys and girls, behavior problems in one environment, transplanted to new surroundings have won through to success.

Selecting the school means adjusting personalities, for personalities are the largest factor that enters into the life of the adolescent. Everything else may be perfect, but if the adjustment between personalities is a maladjustment, failure is likely to result.

THE JOB OF BEING A PARENT

The problems of the modern parent are not what they used to be. Life is more intricate,—our civilization more complex. Few of us have the courage or faith of our grandparents and, trusting in the Lord, beget a dozen children. We are conscious of too many things our grandparents never knew. When we had complete faith that the child was born in iniquity, was a sinner to be saved and brought to the Kingdom of God only through stern measures, then duty was clear. Today we are not so sure. We are more delicately attuned to the maladjustments of the child. We are aware of how easy it is to injure a growing thing and how difficult it is to understand all the complex processes of growth and adjustment.

When we study the care with which the horticulturist adapts soil, atmospheric and food conditions to the varying needs of his plants, when we understand the scientific care that goes into making contented cows produce or into the growing of more profitable hogs, then in the face of the more complex nervous system of the child controlled by his metabolism and endocrinology we may well pause in awe.

It is not strange that we do not know yet as much about how to grow children successfully as we do about how to grow hogs. There has never been the immediate economic reward for success in growing the one as there has the other. There is a possibility that the other is more complexly and delicately adjusted than the one. Our dairy men, too, may be more successful in keeping cows contented than are our own head mistresses in keeping girls contented, for in the first case there is an immediate economic reward or punishment measured in pounds and dollars whereas in the more complex situation it is easier for us to find excuses.

The most important element in any school is the personalities with which the child comes in contact.

In choosing a school, parents should seek the environment, material and personal, that will develop the best possible habits and attitudes,—that will be most beneficial for the boy or girl. An ill adapted environment or an inimical personal relation between teacher and pupil, may vitiate otherwise favorable conditions and result in maladjustment which will bring about failure and may even develop into psychoses. For a particular boy or girl the atmosphere or the personnel of a well-nigh perfect school may prove unfavorable to his best development.

The private school may not be adapted to a given individual. It may prove a misfit and a poorer school. For example, here is a boys college preparatory boarding school. In location, equipment, atmosphere, personnel, clientele, it is all that could be wished for a boy of cultured family. And yet a number of boys of more than first class ability and from foremost families have come to us in the last few years who have failed in this school, their careers temporarily wrecked.

One was the son of an outstanding leader in industry and finance who has earned his position through indomitable force and independence. His son failed in this excellent school and was to repeat the year. At this he rebelled. What was to be done? "What is wrong with the boy?" asked the father. "Much like yourself, perhaps,—independent, non-conforming," the answer.

The school, sure of itself and its perfection, with more boys applying than it could accept, called for a conformity at which the boy inwardly rebelled. He was transferred to another school, not nearly so excellent, but where he was given opportunity to exercise initiative, to do things on his own. With a complete change of attitude, he has had continuous success in school, college and business.

Another boy from this school came to us in the winter. Not only was he failing miserably in all his work, but his health was failing and no cause could be found. He lacked physical energy. He seemed anaemic though the blood count failed to show it. The boy had gone stale on his environment as some plants wither in sour soil. He needed transplanting. His teachers, conscious of his ability, had pushed him to the point of persecution, to which he failed to respond.

This boy was transferred to an Arizona ranch to learn to handle a horse in western style. The next year he entered a different school, of equally high standards, and from the first maintained high rank and through the last three quarters of the year led the school as head boy.

Still another failure in this perfect school,—a handsome reliable boy of good parentage, slow in his mental reactions. After six years in the school he was advised not to return. It was a blow to the family and the beginning of an inferiority complex for the boy. Properly introduced to another school which had made a much higher standing on college entrance examinations, through some personal interest and sympathy he was prepared and admitted to that most exacting institution, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Selecting the school then, means adjusting personalities, for personalities are the largest factor that enters into the life of the adolescent. Everything else may be perfect but if the adjustment between personalities is a maladjustment failure results.

In the past the local minister was the man to whom one went for all kinds of advice. Later the college president, who was probably a minister, was the fount of wisdom, and so parents were led to college officers.

A number of private school people have from time to time set themselves up as educational advisers. But parents, unaccustomed as yet to paying for this kind of professional advice, are hesitant about meeting the fees necessary to support these advisers. So it has been difficult to establish this vocation on a sound professional basis.

Certain public school men, like Angelo Patri and Arthur Dean offer advice to parents about schools for their children, but draw their revenue from syndicated newspaper articles.

Practicing psychologists and psychiatrists approaching the subject from a medical side also have occasion to lay out courses of remedial treatment and in this connection to recommend schools.

Habit clinics for children are now maintained in most enlightened communities by the municipality or the larger social agencies, where behavior and educational problems are studied and advice freely given.

Some national magazines and some local newspapers carry school advertising. A few of them maintain school bureaus in some cases well organized to help parents in choosing a school, though of course, they have to favor their advertisers.

Both parents and school people, especially in the last decade, have come to realize that in the placing of children in schools expert guidance is needed. Competent advice can come only from those who are free and unprejudiced, who not only know the schools intimately, their characteristics and atmosphere, but the personality of those who control them.

Competent advisers should be interested in boys and girls and have intimate knowledge of their needs not only through personal experience and contacts, but from the findings and developments of modern adolescent psychology.

Such knowledge of schools can be arrived at only by comparative methods,—the intimate experience of many who pool their knowledge. Such a group cooperating and working harmoniously may neutralize each other prejudices. Even then, year after year, attitudes, opinions arrived at, must be constantly tested and revised in the light of new information. And this requires an organization with adequate contacts and competent reporting. Representatives should visit schools, and school people should visit the advisers office.

CHOOSING THE SCHOOL

If all our schools were completely socialized and standardized as some would wish, if all our boys and girls were uniformly alike then the selection of a school would be a simple matter, nothing in which one could go very far wrong. But boys and girls continue to differ and even the same individual may require quite a different atmosphere or environment this year from last.

Fortunately there are private schools and nothing is more varied than their varieties and types. They are as different as the personalities that create them, that actuate and dominate them.

The selection of the best school for the individual boy or girl is a matter difficult of adjustment, calling for wide knowledge and deep understanding, not only of schools and their traditions, atmosphere, the class of boys and girls, of teachers and their methods; but of the families that patronize them and the personality of those who control. The environment, the associations in which your child spends his most impressionable years is of vastly more import to him than the terms of your will. The first determines and fixes his habits, his attitude toward life, the nature of man he is to be. And yet how few parents give as much thought to these early years, or engage equally good counsel and advice. What more important function has the parent to perform?

The parent, in the end as in the beginning, is responsible, not only for the existence of the child and his proper nourishment, physical and mental, but for the environment in which he develops, and the final result produced.

Education is primitively and primarily the function of the home, and it is only when parents are giving their time, their energies and specialized services to the welfare of the community, whether as factory operators or as administrators of large affairs, that the state is justified in assuming the parents' function for the child. The state must, of course, where the parent is incompetent, criminal or imbecile, assume responsibility for the children.

PUBLIC OR PRIVATE?

The public schools are obliged to use, or have been obliged to develop, wholesale methods of handling children in lots, batches being subjected to similar treatment during a period of nine months and then, after a three months' interval, subjected to a slightly different treatment in another vat or schoolroom much like the process through which hides are passed in the old-fashioned tannery. As the individuals which make up the groups going through these processes differ, the effect of the treatment is varied. Some come out hardened and finished, some suffer internal injuries and some are thrown on the scrap heap as waste material

In special cases the qualities of the individual are discovered and developed, but in the great majority of cases the insistence on conformity leads to submergence of individual traits. Tastes and interests are lost, for which compensations must be found. From the ten per cent who are not advanced, but are repeaters, a large proportion of our social derelicts are developed.

The public school has assumed that there is a considerable degree of equality in the raw material as well as the finished product, that technical devices, methods and organization are most important, that its business is imparting facts and drill in their use, that factory methods of mass production are effective, that children, male or female, negro, gentile or orthodox Hebrew, must be treated alike to become patriotic, hundred per cent American citizens.

These are the things which the parent must assume that he will find in the public schools, unless he discovers to the contrary. And there are any number of public schools that are progressive, that are fostering the individual, that are measurably better than many of the private schools.

The private school, on the other hand, has been established to meet community needs or to fit the requirements of a special social group, or to cater to a particular group and their methods.

Fortunately then, private schools differ widely in type as well as in their clientele, atmosphere, methods, expenses and in the personality of those who control. Boys and girls will continue to be born different and while most of these individual differences are inevitably ironed out by the various institutions and mores which make up our culture, still it is desirable that some, at least to a certain extent, be permitted to develop their own best qualities in an environment that makes this possible.

FEW CHOOSE INTELLIGENTLY

Most parents have the school chosen for them by their friends and neighbors. They are imitative in this as in other things. Getting into a school with them is part of the process of keeping up with the Joneses. Others gravitate to the nearest school and many have their choice prescribed by their social circle.

A good Episcopalian family is almost necessarily limited to a choice of a few church schools. A family of social prominence has its choice similarly restricted and some poor little rich children are condemned to go to a school because their fathers or mothers did, without any thought of its suitability. But the greater number arrive at a choice more or less haphazard, by hearsay, or from information that some acquaintance of a member of the family gives them

But even the conscientious, open-minded parent, intent upon finding the best environment for his child, had difficulties enough, usually, to force him back into the traditional rut

Nor is the situation much different in England H G Wells in his "Joan and Peter, The Story of an Education," tells of a search for a school and pictures the chaos of educational conditions in England. Oswald, who had been an empire builder in Africa and did not know the ways of civilization, went first to the Imperial Education Department. But what do they know about schools! He is referred to the advertising columns of the periodicals, and "said the official with extreme detachment, 'Usually, of course, people hear of schools'"

School catalogs and school advertisements have improved greatly in the last few years and are much more reliable than they once were. But seldom can either of these be relied upon to give the parent the information he needs. They furnish little more than clues for further investigation or verification.

BYWAYS AND HIGHWAYS

Private schools present themselves in the greatest variety, not only differing in type and function, but also as widely divergent in character as the personalities that direct them. They range from the rigidly exclusive to the broadly democratic, from the school that prepares for one college to the school that prepares for any college or for business life, from the vigilantly parental, minutely supervised institution, cloistered away from temptation on some remote hillside, to the collegiate type, with a minimum of rules and scarcely more surveillance than is given a freshman at a great university.

Again there are schools whose outlook is wholly toward the past and whose practices are entirely traditional. There are church schools where religion is wholly a matter of ritual and formalism which results in a revulsion of feeling on the part of those who are more than mere creatures of habit.

There are "finishing schools," so called "because of what they do to father," conducted by eminent financiers. Some of these schools, as Warden Bell of St. Stephens College writes, are "the great resting place for the intellectually incompetent" and "desire to turn out a product which can behave itself reasonably well in polite society."

Some of them are pretentious, putting up a tremendous bluff in inflated faculty lists and elaborate courses on paper. Some of these schools are shams, the dominant note hypocrisy, sometimes, a spurious sanctity. Some are purely commercial enterprises, their owners intent on money-making, ready to take anyone and squeeze out the last dollar. Some of them have been established by men and women who have failed in other lines and who plod through the weary years without life or interest in their work. Some of them, overshadowed by a great name and ideals which those now in control are unable to live up to, bear the stamp of insincerity. Some of them are for climbers and wish it understood that membership in the school implies social position. Some of them are for snobs and turn out a finished product.

But the great majority of these private schools are in the hands of sincere, hard working men and women who have ideals, genuine love for youth and intense enthusiasm for their work. A parent will have done well who has placed a son or daughter under the influence of a great teacher whose overflowing heart and intellect is a constant inspiration. For personality is the greatest thing in education, and in a private school, especially, personality is all-important,—not only the personality of those who direct, but the character of those who patronize the school.

PERSONALITY FIRST

“It is the contact with other students and the master which gives the greatest value to higher education. The master proves the possibility of work. He is the living, concrete, tangible, and respected example of what can be done by working. The master finds his own reward in arousing enthusiasm in his disciples, by the communication of an ardent love for the truth and of good methods of work. Influence only comes through the contact of man to man, and soul to soul. It was thus Socrates taught Plato” (Payot, in “The Education of the Will”).

The public schools supply an education in which organization, system, bricks and mortar play a large part and in which personality, individual interest, does not and cannot very largely enter. If the patrons of the private school have anything to expect beyond what the public school has to offer, it is first a richer and more inspiring influence of the strong and cultured personalities of the teachers directed toward the individual pupil; and second, the larger influence that the classmates and school associates exert upon the developing personality.

This book, it is hoped, may be of value in aiding parents to distinguish between all these various classes of schools and to assist them to a more intelligent choice, so that their children may not have to put up with a misfit education and that they themselves may join with Marcus Aurelius in saying, “I thank the gods that I had abundance of good masters for my children.”

THE NEED OF THE PRIVATE SCHOOL

All education was originally private, that is, there was no organized or socialized system of taxation to support concerted effort. The she bear cuffing her cubs to save them the pain of more bitter experience is engaged in private education. Elders in primitive civilizations pass on the experience of the race to the young. This is private education, though in some tribes at puberty there is concerted or socialized ritual in which all the qualified members of the tribe participate. This more or less corresponds to our public education as exemplified in the convocations of our school board, trustees or regents.

The great end of education has always been to communicate experience, to perpetuate ideas, to transmit traditions. The great purpose of education has always been to pass on the torch. In England today tradition and custom are all pervading, but among primitive peoples such as the aborigines of Australia, custom, ritual and tabu in the training of the young are even more dominant.

There is little that is more fundamental in the intellectual life of man than the desire to make others see eye to eye with him. For he feels that his view is right,—he sees correctly. This has made for devotion to great causes. It has been the impulse that has driven missionaries and warriors to convert others to their views, to perpetuate their own ideas. The coming generation and particularly our own children naturally become our first care. And so education and educators have been mighty busy these past centuries, as they are today, getting a tremendous kick out of inculcating their own ideals and ideas, in molding children's minds, in training adolescents to see and think as they do, and in protecting these same growing minds from all influences that they themselves don't openly enjoy.

Only an autocrat like Mussolini or a democratic majority can impose their ideas on the whole educational system. Until so dominated and controlled, education under private initiative will continue to show the greatest diversity. In pre-war Germany as in soviet Russia today education is used as the main prop of the autocratic government and no minorities are permitted to interfere. In England and America all education was, until quite recently, under private initiative and it is only after its value had been demonstrated and a wide-spread demand created, that the cost of its support has been successfully unloaded on the tax payer.

Private initiative will always take the lead in democratic countries in demonstrating the value of sanitary, medical, educational or other social measures before the cost can be successfully unloaded through taxation on accumulated wealth.

In New England and the older parts of our country private schools and academies were established long before there was any public school system and it was their success that created the demand for public schools. In the middle west there are few private schools; the demand for public schools had been created before the country was settled. Through bond issues and taxation the state established the first schools.

Those college professors and others in this country who would completely socialize our school system would suppress the private schools. These men, like Professor Briggs of Teachers College, have come chiefly from the middle west where education is conceived as having sprung full fledged by state fiat. They forget the long battle that was waged in the older states in unloading the cost of the common schools on the tax payer and later the battle for public high schools.

In every branch of education which now has public support, individuals have originally taken the initiative and private enterprise has first demonstrated the worth of each educational departure to the community. "The wholesome conservatism of government throws the burden of proving a thing good, upon individuals and societies."

The early efforts toward the higher education of girls, the first kindergartens, the introduction of manual training were born of personal conviction, fostered by private associations, and only gradually won public recognition and support. The first art schools and museums, the first gymnasiums, the first technical schools were all the result of individual initiative.

So eager have the American people been for education, so open minded has been the public to educational advance, that our public schools have long been efficient enough to satisfy the major needs of the public. The very excellence of our public schools has led us to expect from them the impossible. Our educational machinery has been overloaded with tasks it is inadequate to perform. Hence we have been hearing of "the breakdown of our educational system," and "the failure of education to educate." We are learning that the public school cannot remedy defects due to early home neglect and cannot perform functions for which it is unadapted.

The French Revolutionary idea of equality of treatment of school children, like the idea of equality in native abilities, is passing. Every mental test, school grade, wage scale and income tax seems to mathematically set aside this concept.

There remains a lingering belief not wholly unwarranted that somehow the boy on the farm and the girl at the spinning wheel of a few generations ago received training which made for character, not equalled by the efforts of our highly systematized public schools today. A few private schools are now attempting to reproduce to some extent the beneficial conditions of those sterner, sturdier days of the past. In other quarters a tendency has arisen to break away from the old formalism in school life which is seen reflected in the so-called progressive schools.

Yet educators have been asking themselves whether or not the private schools still have any reason for being. The reports of the national and state commissioners of education have given scant attention to the private schools. The pedagogical departments of the universities, with rare exceptions like Harvard, still look down upon the private schools as mere money-making institutions of little vital importance in a great democracy.

The public schools are free to all. If they offered all that could be desired by all, the private schools would cease to exist. Private schools can continue only by earning their way, by appealing not to economic but to idealistic motives on the part of their patrons. Innumerable private schools have failed to do this and have passed. Great numbers of private schools are continually coming into existence to meet new demands, new needs. Many of these are inaugurated directly by parents or groups of parents or communities. Today we find the private schools more alive, with a more rapidly growing patronage than for decades past. There is no progressive city today in the United States that does not have its country day school supplying something that the public schools have not yet undertaken. In every progressive community the country day school is demonstrating to taxpayers the success of this better and more complete form of schooling so that in a few years they will demand that they be taxed for it.

It is not sufficient to ascribe this popularity to the increase of wealth and willingness of parents to meet the fees of the private schools. For the parents of these children the education provided by the government was not acceptable. It is true that in a private school a pupil receives more individual attention, and that many of the private schools make this one of their chief claims for patronage, maintaining a ratio of as high as one teacher to ten pupils, and in special cases much higher. The public school must from necessity employ a more democratic and machine-like form of instruction. For the special training that has been necessary to enter the older universities, the private school is still almost essential.

THE PRIVATE SCHOOL TODAY

A new vitality is everywhere apparent in the private schools of the country. Never before has so much money been available for new construction and equipment in the expansion of old schools and the establishment of new. There is, it is true, a falling off in the enrollment and current income due to the major business depression through which we are passing and which may continue for another year. But this is much less than in any other field. But in the face of the great decrease in national income it can be confidently stated that the enrollment in the private school has not decreased more than 8% and the income only about 15%,—the difference being due to many transfers to lower priced schools.

In many families that in the past have patronized private schools but where income has been reduced, there has been a sudden appreciation of the excellence of the local public school system. Moreover, there has been increased enrollment in the more worthy moderate priced schools with an accompanying decrease in many schools of the expensive type. The economic situation, too, has turned attention from the finishing schools to those that give professional or vocational training.

NEW MONEY AVAILABLE

Somewhere between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 is, or will shortly be, available for private school construction and equipment. This was made apparent in a nation wide survey published in the February, March and May issues, 1931, of Private School News. This information, gathered from every source, the public press, architects, trustees and school authorities, covered scores of items of from a hundred thousand dollars to several millions now available for private schools.

An exhibit of architects drawings, plans, perspectives and photographs of new buildings for private schools brought together by Porter Sargent in the seven rooms of his 13th floor offices revealed recent or planned construction to the amount of $60,000,000. Most notable among the great endowments to individual schools has been the $17,000,000 from the will of Bernice Pauahi Bishop to the Kamehameha Schools in Honolulu; the $16,000,000 foundation for the Cranbrook Schools given by Mr. and Mrs. George G. Booth of Detroit; the $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 that has recently been put into the Phillips Academy, Andover, endowment and equipment for almost the same amount put into Phillips Exeter, including $7,000,000 from Edward Stephen Harkness to establish the tutorial system of education.

Mrs Leonard K. Elmhirst, née Dorothy Whitney, daughter of William C. Whitney, New York City traction magnate of the eighties, and formerly Mrs. Willard K. Straight, is planning to devote $10,000,000 of her great inheritance to an extensive economic, social, and educational experiment in Totnes, Devon, England under an English master who had intensive experience in the United States. Here on a three thousand acre estate with fourteenth century buildings, is growing up Dartington Hall School, an experimental school of international character.

By the will of Harvey G. Woodward, a Southern iron manufacturer, an estate, conservatively estimated at $7,500,000 was left in 1930 to the Alabama Educational Foundation which is directed by his will to found a chain of boarding schools throughout the South for white boys.

Even more notable in some ways is Henry Ford's announced determination to expend $100,000,000 a year on education. His educational work began in 1914 with a group of wayward boys, state charges. Today at his training schools at Rouge River and Highland Park, there are 2900 boys from ten to nineteen. Shop and school work are alternated in two weeks periods. Every boy gets three years of high school academic work and learns a trade. Ford's Edison Institute more recently started in connection with the building of an industrial museum will eventually take care of a thousand advanced students. In South Sudbury, Massachusetts, he maintains a third school.

THE PRIVATE SCHOOL RESURGENT

Not all private schools are alive and progressive. Some are moribund. Some trustees find their chief interest in conserving funds. Many wealthy men are coming to take the point of view of Morgenthau and refuse to leave their money to trustees to be conserved, preferring to have their bequests spent within a time limit.

A decade or so ago the private school was supposed to be on the decline. Sixty years ago there were less than a score of public high schools. Today the number approaches 25,000. The rise of the public high school has been so rapid that thousands of private academies have been supplanted or transformed into public high schools. In New England there are still some towns with private academies where the tax payers have resisted the establishment of high schools but in the middle western communities public high schools were the first secondary schools. The people here have not witnessed the outgrowth of public schools from private schools so it is not strange that it was in the west that ten years ago legislative attempts were made to suppress the private schools. And it is from this territory chiefly that there comes those like Professor Thomas Briggs of Columbia who would suppress all private initiative and completely socialize our educational system. The present evidence of growth and vitality must prove confounding to these enemies of the private school

The prosperity of the private school reflects the growing wealth of the country and is immediately due to the high quality of salesmanship and favorable publicity that has come to the private schools in the last decade.

THE MISSION

The private schools, generally speaking, attempt much more than the public schools are permitted to. The government has assumed responsibility of providing free education of certain kinds, varying somewhat in different states and localities. Kindergartens are undertaken at public expense in one region, but not in another. University education is freely provided in the western states, but not in the east. Military, technical, commercial, open air, domestic science, and physical culture schools have appeared always as private enterprises. Generally speaking, higher education in music, art, expression is still dependent on private institutions

A very considerable proportion of the private schools are boarding schools which fill a need that, except in the case of delinquency, the public has never yet attempted to meet. Either the private boarding high school must be recognized as a public necessity or the public will have to provide a public boarding high school, for the public day school can never accomplish the best results with the student who lives in an antagonistic or uncultured home. The best school cannot in the twelve hundred hours that make the school year neutralize the unfortunate influences the home may exert in the other seven-eighths of the year's hours. Many children of the rich have owed their salvation to the boarding school of simple life and high ideals.

Today as in the past the private school is still serving as a national laboratory in which educational experiments in the greatest variety are being tried out and tested. The country day school and summer camp, perhaps the most notable recent developments in education, are still conducted as private enterprises, but the best and most practicable features of them will indubitably in time be adopted by the public school systems. In a lesser way, too, private school masters are developing new principles of school management which will be adopted by the public when their utility and efficiency have been demonstrated.

The extent to which the private schools will continue to flourish and draw patronage will always depend upon the adequacy with which the state meets the demands of education, not only in ample accommodation for pupils, but in open-mindedly searching for and accepting the best that is new. For we have yet almost everything to learn about education, which in the past has been a haphazard matter of tradition, almost of ritual.

But in some measure the private school will always continue to exist however efficient the public education, for, in addition to those who insist upon segregation upon the basis of class or religion, a more radical element, experimentally minded, will wish to see new schemes, new theories, new methods worked out which can only be attempted under private enterprise

RE-VITAMINIZING EDUCATION

The characteristic thing about the school of the eighties and nineties was the straight rows of desks. To play school children first arranged chairs in straight rows. Then one of them would imitate the severe, formal manner of the teacher. That was school. Such was the formal system, and a barren ritual prevailed. Except when mischief or bootlicking the teacher was uppermost in their minds, schoolchildren were a dead, drooping, devitalized lot.

You may have seen pictures of laboratory rats deprived of vitamins. With ruffled coats, relaxed muscles, bleary eyes, and sagging heads, they are sad-looking objects. After the vitamins have been restored to their diet the same rats are sleek, alert. Similarly devitaminized were the children in the formal schools of the eighties. It was educational rickets.

Stand where you may watch the children coming to any modern country day school at the opening hour. You see them arriving by car, bus or on foot. They come with singing step, elate, alert. You look in vain for the school boy of old dragging his feet 'unwillingly to school.' These children are not suffering from educational rickets. Upon what vitamins have they been fed that were lacking in the old days? How have they been so revitalized?

THE WHOLE WHEAT CYCLE

During the past hundred and fifty years we have gone through a cycle in the use of wheat. Our ancestors took their home-grown grain to the local mill and made their bread from the flour of the whole wheat or rye. With increasing wealth and improved milling methods, white flour, once a luxury, envied by the black-bread-eating peasant of Europe, came within the reach of all those who at that time were 'keeping up with the Joneses.' The miller, meeting the demand for increased whiteness, rid the flour of its bran, protein, and mineral salts, and by chlorination gave an added whiteness. The life-giving vitamins went to the bran mash for the old mare or to the chickens.

Such was our state of refinement, when in the thirties the indignation of the bakers of this country was aroused by a crank, an ardent vegetarian, one Dr. Sylvester Graham, a native of Suffield, Connecticut. He went about lecturing and pleading for the discarded food elements of the grain. He built himself a lasting monument of graham bread. But it was the cranks and dyspeptics that heeded him. Respectable people long continued to follow the fashion.

In the nineties among the Seventh Day Adventists at Battle Creek, Post and Kellogg, catering to health faddists, developed processes for making the whole grain palatable. These cereals made from the whole grain today dominate the American breakfast table and are conspicuous in the food shops patronized by Americans in Rome or Paris.

White bread is still sold, especially in the poorer sections of our cities. But in the better residential sections, 'Bran,' 'Health,' 'Whole-wheat,' the black-bread of the peasant in endless varieties, is now the fashion.

As the native red man started on a hunting expedition with a handful of parched maize, so today our children go to school and our business men to work on a handful of parched whole grain. We have swung the full circle.

FOOD FASHIONS

Fashions in foods sometimes become tabus, the cannibal, the pork-eating Jew, the beef-eating Hindu violate tabus which were once fashions but are now ingrained in the race or religion. In the Marquesas, 'long pig' was tabu for women only. Friday flesh is proscribed for Catholics as Thanksgiving turkey is proscribed for Americans.

There are fashions too in mental foods, even in school subjects. The fad for arithmetic seems to be passing. At least the doses prescribed for our children today are much reduced. In early Colonial times a child needing arithmetic was sent to a private school of cyphering. The thick 'College Arithmetic' used in 1800 in the Freshman and Sophomore years at Harvard had lengthy chapters on 'Partial Payments,' 'Permutations,' and 'Progressions.'

CURRICULUM FASHIONS

English courses are the thing today. Fifty years ago English was not taught in school or college. It's the antique eighteenth century chair of Rhetoric and Oratory at Harvard that the head of the English department occupies today. Now every September, three hundred thousand teachers begin again to teach English to English-speaking pupils. Every day in the school year every pupil, from primary to college, studies this one required subject. But do we spell, write, or read better because these English-teaching teachers teach? Editors are printing thoughtful articles on 'Why Teach English' or 'The Futility of Teaching English.' English may again go out of fashion.

The school curriculum we see has changed and is changing. But more profound have been the changes in the life and activities of boys and girls of the city apartment of 1930 in contrast with the New England homestead of 1830.

OUR GRANDFATHERS SCHOOLING

It was the farm that gave us the men and women of initiative who developed the resources of our country. Something in their early training enabled them to meet emergencies successfully and conquer difficulties,—something that bred a race of machine tool builders who revolutionized our manufacturing processes, of captains and leaders that organized our industries and transportation and developed our country, of statesmen who guided our political fortunes through trying times.

Their schooling was meager. Often the session in the little red schoolhouse was only for the three or four winter months when some yokel from a neighboring college was drafted to 'keep school.' This formal schooling with its limited book learning could hardly have supplied the balanced ration on which our fathers fed. The schoolmasters assumed that it did. They magnified and elaborated the book work, the formal side of education. As demand increased, they multiplied textbooks, and rows of desks grew longer and straighter. The 'little red schoolhouse' became a sacred symbol, its servitors a priesthood, and the priestcraft developed its rite and ritual.

THE BATTLE FOR FREE EDUCATION

It was inevitable that education should be thus formalized. It was incident to the building up of a democratic school system, for the cost of supplying popular education had to be adjusted to what the taxpayer would bear and that meant mass production and formalized education. Men like Mann and Bernard, demagogues of the time, statesmen of today, proclaiming the new doctrine that education was the bulwark of democracy, fed the popular clamor for book learning long denied.

The real achievement of the time was the winning of the long-fought battle which forced upon the taxpayer the cost of general schooling. Flushed with victory, schoolmasters and school patrons regarded their educational system as perfect. Had they not achieved their end? Coming generations had only to be subjected to the educational processes they had devised, to be put through the machine, and a benign God would continue to smile upon them while the earth continued to yield its fullness.

But in these wholesale processes of whitening and refining the flour, the bran had been discarded, the vitamins lost.

PUTTING THE BRAN BACK

Who was the Graham of this complacent school world? Perhaps it was Colonel Francis W. Parker who in the 'eighties at Quincy, Massachusetts, first dared to take whole classes of children from their straight rows of desks into the outdoors, to awaken in these children the thought that the beginnings of geography were in the brook bed or in the gutter after a shower, not primarily in a book. Parker's enthusiastic disciples went out preaching their new gospel at 'Teachers' Institutes' throughout the land.

He was a crank, too radical for the staid New England of the 'eighties, so he moved on to the Cook County Normal School, Chicago. There he begat John Dewey and Flora J. Cooke, out of whom came our progressive schools and the soviet system of education.

In the 'nineties, from the citadel of respectability, came the powerful, patient voice of Harvard's president, Eliot, calmly insisting on 'enrichment of the curriculum'. Stuffing the mind and saving the soul had been the aims of those who worked with children and youth. But this Puritan insisted on recognition of the body, training the senses and the hand. He called for appreciation of nature, music, beauty, so long eschewed askance in Christian education.

This was a time when goodwives still avoided the deadly miasmas of the night air, and aired and sunned the 'spare room' once a year. But Eliot broke in upon the whole educational racket. He shocked and startled the complacent educators by insistently letting the fresh air and sunlight into the educational parlors. The sunshine from new ideas and new activities has re-vitalized the de-vitaminized rats of the schoolroom so that we are in a fair way to get rid of our educational rickets.

Why should Parker and Eliot have stirred up discontent with our schools when everything apparently had been perfected and was going so well? They felt the inadequacy of the system. As Graham saw that a starch diet without vitamins could sustain only devitalized activity, these leaders were confident that such formalized schooling could never produce men and women of initiative and resourcefulness.

LIFE ON THE NEW ENGLAND FARM

Let us go back to the old New England farm life of the boys and girls of several generations ago, a life that lasted through generations until the steam locomotive changed it. In an address at the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of his native Berkshire town, Ashfield, G. Stanley Hall, the child psychologist, long president of Clark University, pictured vividly and autobiographically the farm life of his boyhood.

"I learned to hoe, mow, chop, plow, plant, sow, milk, fodder cattle, clean stalls, dig, make fences and stone walls, shovel snow, make maple sugar, soap out of lye, wood ashes, and fat; and evenings my father taught me how to make brooms, and my mother and aunts how to braid palmleaf hats, knit stockings and shag mittens, and I was often called on to make fires, wash dishes, and even cook a little, although this latter was often severely criticised by those who had to partake of my viands. Now we call these things agriculture, domestic art, or occupations, but then we called them work.

"Life here, then was by no means all a grind, for there was abundant recreation. There was much fishing, and fish were then plenty, with trapping and hunting, there were games galore, out-of-doors and within, for summer and winter. There were spelling and singing schools, and weekly debates in the winter evenings in the schoolhouses, and occasional dances at private houses, bad as these and surreptitious games of old sledge and euchre were."

HOUSEHOLD ARTS

Girls, too, had no need to study domestic art or household science from textbooks and schools. They learned by doing under mother and granddam. Supplying the family needs was sufficient incentive. Carding wool, hatching flax, spinning, weaving, dyeing, provided the clothing for each member of the large family. It was only for a wedding or some great event, or after sudden acquisition of wealth by trade with the West Indies that a yard of cloth was bought.

Dyeing, too, was an important household craft. So it had been for thousands of years with our ancestors. And so it still is in our ancestral home within 500 miles of the Caspian Sea where our best rugs are still made with vegetable dyes. Master craftsmen in each New England community knew the proper season for collecting the root or bark necessary to make the desired color. With textile art and craft a heritage and interest in each family, there was no need for daughters to go to art school to imitate the batik of the Javanese and there were no state textile schools.

TRAINING IN INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE

Some of the household industries produced articles for sale, brooms, rush and rag rugs, knitted goods. From white ash splints, cut and beaten with the flat of the axe by the boys, the women made baskets. These manufactures sometimes supplied as much revenue as did the barren fields, the sheep pastures, the wood lot, and the maple grove.

By lantern light, wagon trains, starting long before day-break, from the middle Connecticut river valley over newly built turnpikes straight as an arrow, carried these articles as well as products of the farm to Portsmouth and Boston, some to be sent to the Indies. From foreign countries came back in exchange for home products imported sandalwood boxes, Lowestoft, Cheddar shawls, treasured today as heirlooms. Our foreign commerce began on the farm and in the home.

NECESSITY AND INVENTION

'Mill brooks', where sometimes there are but a few lichen-covered stones remaining, are everywhere in New England, eloquent of past industry. A bit of mossy wall, a sedgy pool recalls the grist mill, or the spot where the sawyer and the fuller plied their craft. From the mill pond slopes the upland. Amid the brush of the pasture one may still see ancient sodded hills in the boulder-strewn corn fields where once the farmer and his boys, wresting their sustenance from the soil, hoed their crooked rows while the mill wheel droned. At the sound of cogs gone wrong, the steady song of the mill wheel interrupted, the hoe was dropped, the damage repaired, the corn must be ground. These farm boys with their training made 'Yankee ingenuity' a by-word.

The South, to find a means of ginning its cotton and making slavery profitable, came to a Massachusetts farm boy, Eli Whitney. This same farm boy's greater invention of 'interchangeable parts' made modern machine industry possible and so has affected intimately the life of every individual on the footstool, from Angola to Zungaria. Whitney entered a bid for Revolutionary army rifles so far below all competitors that, challenged, he revealed his great invention of stamping and dieing parts that had formerly been hand-wrought. Each part, hammer and trigger, was interchangeable and fitted every other rifle!

ADJUSTMENT AND ADAPTATION

A capricious and intemperate climate, always ready to bring suffering and disaster to the unprepared, stimulated an awareness to the passing of time and season and rewarded those who made use of passing opportunity for putting the stud to the mare, for removing the ram from the flock, for reaping, for sowing. The maple yielded its sap only under certain meteorological conditions. The boy on the farm learned the advantage of seizing old Father Time by the forelock before his rusty scythe cut across his shins.

Such initiative and ingenuity as an opportunity our boys show today cannot be credited to our schools or present environment, but are a hang-over from the past. Henry Ford and the Wright brothers owed the qualities that brought them success less to their schoolmasters than to their days of truancy.

Cooperation in the family was essential to making a living. Coordination of activities between neighbors in community affairs, in enterprises requiring large man power as in 'raisings' was on occasion essential to their welfare.

RESOURCEFULNESS AND INITIATIVE

It was these very qualities of resourcefulness and initiative nurtured on the farm that led to the development of our industrial system.

Mill centers grew up about the water powers. During the nineteenth century this process of urbanization went on, depleting the farms and crowding the slums.

Beside the upland roads of New England one sees in the fields and pastures clumps of lilacs, choke cherries, bouncing Bet, or tiger lilies marking the old cellar holes, for the earliest roads, like the Indian trails, avoided the tangled growth of the river valleys and followed through the open woodlands of the uplands. Here the fields were more easily cleared and here the earlier upland settlements grew up. Down in the valley, choked with undergrowth and frequently blocked with fallen trees, the river ran unchecked over the rocky rips and rapids. Here were the haunts of the bobcats.

Today as we drive on a mile or two beyond these old cellar holes we look into the narrow valley crowded with mills and tenements. Here in the early nineteenth century the farm-trained boy had found ways of harnessing the wild waters. From the upland farms the people drained into the valleys and the farms were abandoned. As the mills grew under the organizing hand of these farm boys, the labor supply of Ireland, the Mediterranean countries and the Balkans was successively drawn upon. Then as new water powers and sources of labor in the Southern mountains were opened up, these towns dwindled. Today many mills stand idle. The electric power from the still harnessed waters is transmitted by high tension lines for use by the public utilities in distant cities for household purposes.

A new generation may yet see the beauty of the waterfall and rapids restored, the banks where today grimy tenements stand returned to a natural growth of shrubbery, landscaped and accessible. Still later with the development of inter-atomic energy these waters may yet run wild, leaping to delight the eye of future generations as they did the aborigine and the pioneer.

THE FARM A SCHOOL OF CHARACTER

The farm was the early nineteenth century training school for the men who brought about this industrial transformation. No wonder the farms were gradually abandoned as these capable boys were needed elsewhere. Without the resourcefulness and initiative they brought to the deeper soil in the industrial centers, they could not have developed the administrative and executive ability demanded.

In these concentrated and increasingly busy cross-roads of trade, it was the farm boys who became the great merchants and the captains of industry. This concentration of population under urban conditions has deprived our children of their birthright. The farm-bred boy is withholding from his grandchildren their rightful heritage.

URBAN DECADENCE

The little street-bred children of the apartments and tenements, whose only escape is to the traffic-crowded streets or the over-sexed movies, are cut off from nature, deprived of purposeful activities, starved for all on which their fathers fed. What do they know of nature's elemental forces through floor plugs and light sockets? Of the joys and fears of Whittier's "Barefoot Boy" or "Snowbound" they know nothing, protected as they are by truant officers and municipal street cleaning departments.

Nightly before their Boards of Education, school superintendents discuss the relative merits of this or that floor oil and whether the daughter of this politician shall be granted a certain certificate. How can these administrators of our democratic school system give time or concern to what is elemental or vital? Education has been democratized, everybody has a say, everybody a finger in the pie. Schooling has been brought to the millions within such limits of cost as the taxpayer will stand for. It has been a great achievement.

WHENCE COMES LEADERSHIP

But who are the leaders today, and where did they get their training and initiative? Where did they find the opportunity as boys to 'put it over' on their fellows? Where did they get the reward for economic initiative? Not in the well-to-do homes or in the public schools where their activities and ideas were systematically repressed.

The gamin in the gutter, the child of the slums, the newsboy, has become the Al Smith of today, the Governor, the foremost man of our greatest metropolis. The son of Sicilian peasants, Al Capone, has become the great man in our second greatest metropolis, Chicago. Who in America possesses such a genius for organization? For initiative, drive, leadership, success in attaining their ideals, such men owe little to our schools but everything to the opportunity afforded by the failure of our schools.

How can we again give to our city-bred children the training in awareness, in resourcefulness that makes for leadership? Is it possible to introduce into our educational training some of the values that come to the barefoot boy and the gamin? Without the husks and dirt of the primitive milling, can we not put back into our educational fodder the essential elements of the bran? Can we not revitaminize our education?

FETTERING THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

This is the problem which a few modern and progressive educators bravely face today. Tax-supported schools will not introduce innovations until they have been proved under private initiative. The Country Day school is showing us how better to utilize the whole day. The progressive school movement, with all its follies, is showing us how to use the child's internal energies through interest, how to hitch school achievement to the urge for mastery which we all feel.

New ideas have to be bootlegged into our public schools. The public school man has little freedom; living on money raised through taxation, he is responsible to every citizen and the taxpayer is prepared to grumble at any expense he deems unnecessary. Every innovation must pass the scrutiny and have the approval successively of the principal, the superintendent, the board of education, the legislature, and courts of review. In some states instruction of certain types is carried on illegally. The courts of North Carolina long maintained that Junior College instruction could not legally be paid for out of legislative appropriations. The Supreme Court of this state in its decision of August 30, 1930, reversed this ruling and legalized the Junior College.

There are alert superintendents and idealistic schoolmasters in hundreds of communities who are helping to win popular approval for the spending of school funds on other than the traditionally sanctioned activities. Once popular approval is won, the practice of using public monies for afternoon play or supervision or what you will, becomes legal by enactment, and the taxpayer pays.

Millions of school children, however, are still condemned to sit in straight rows, at fixed desks, fed from a sterile curriculum, inactive and repressed. The schools are contributing little to their lives, the movie czars of Hollywood much.

Flexner in his recent and searching study "Universities" is equally scathing of our high schools and says in effect, 'No wonder we are an uneducated race, a nation of Babbitts. With nearly a million of our youth in colleges and over ten million in high schools, there is little chance for the individual to survive these standardizing processes '

A PEOPLE WITH MENTAL RICKETS

We are a people suffering from educational rickets, our mentalities and moralities are weak and flabby, the respectable stand for special privilege, the gangster maintains his racket, judges are corrupt and law contemptible, one-twelfth of our national income goes to pay the crime bill and two-thirds for our war bill, past and future. Never except in the years of war's mad delirium has the war god levied such tribute on the nations as in this year of 1930. If this is what our educational system yields, then the one and one-half percent of our income that we have been putting into it is too much. There are thoughtful men who doubt whether there is anything in our educational system that is worth patching or saving. The world's greatest thinkers, men of scientific vision, knowing the past and looking most clearly into the future, see that our institutions, our traditions, our tabus are the cause of repressions which are increasingly filling our jails and asylums. Our civilization is sick, the human race itself has a psychosis.

RESTORING THE VITAMINES

If our spiritual and mental food were changed, if the life-giving vitamins could be restored to our diet, a transformation might yet come over our civilization as marvelous as came to the de-vitaminized laboratory rats when they were re-fed on bran.

There have been primitive races within the memory of living man uncontaminated by contact with our civilization, races where life was unashamed, unrepressed and pleasing to old Mother Nature, where psychoses were as rare and the race as sound mentally as were our ancestors ten thousand years ago. Such were the northern Esquimos with their primitive joy of life unconquered by the savageness of nature. Tragic is the story of the 'Paradises of the Pacific' ruined by the bacilli, spirochaetes, and standards brought by white Christians. Man in his blindness destroys that which saves and sanctifies that which destroys. It is the froth of civilization that we prize.

Kirtley Mather, the Harvard geologist, with vision of a billion years, is hopeful that the species will survive because of the "small minority, struggling against the overburden of a complacent and conservative majority," but whether the spawn of the future superman lies in the loins of the white or yellow race is with Mather yet to be proved.

Elot Smith and Arthur Keith, England's leading anthropologists, are outspoken in their views that there is little hope for man if this civilization survive. Primitive man was free from psychosis, Smith believes, before agriculture made land property and brought rulership and war. To survive we must sacrifice cherished traditions, institutions, and tabus and get 'back to the Greeks' and the primitive. Keith warns us that "modern civilization is tending to replace ability with mediocrity" and "leading us straight into physical and mental bankruptcy."

Sigmund Freud will not commit himself as to the value of our civilization, in his latest book, "Civilization and Its Discontents." He holds that civilization has given us a psychosis, that man's hard-won mastery of nature's forces has brought us where we may destroy the species. This is what civilization has thrust upon us, this is the white man's burden of this decade. The killing repressions, the blighting influences of tradition and tabu are upon us. There is hope for us in getting back to nature, in getting back to what is primitive and fundamental.

Our institutionalized education has been planned and conceived to perpetuate ideas once held sacred, now suspect. Even the second-hand book learning valued by an earlier generation is under suspicion. We have been fed too long on chlorinated white flour. Getting back to the primitive, restoring the bran with its life-giving vitamins, may yet bring to our children the vigor and vitality of old.

RE-ENERGIZING EDUCATION

There is a jam on the track ahead. The great mogul engine of the freight on the siding panting heavily, the vibrant beat of the locomotive of the stalled passenger train, tell of impatient energy restrained. The safety valves suddenly release two hundred pounds of pressure. My heart leaps, my pulses stop, my nervous system is paralyzed, my ear drums crash. Pandemonium reverberates.

Quiet broods over the school yard. The low drone from the brick hive is stilled by the sharp clang of bells. The rhythm of shuffling feet marches toward me. Through open doors lines of shouting, yelling children pour out. The pent-up energy so long repressed is suddenly released. A hundred thousand times a day, every day, every year, this useless waste of energy prevents explosions and saves what might be lost.

Is such waste necessary? Is such violent reaction desirable and healthful? Is there no way to utilize this wasted energy? What is being done to devise ways of releasing this internal energy under control so as to build useful habits and what we call character?

UTILIZING THE CHILD'S WHOLE DAY

In the fin de siècle days of 1897, in the languorous old city of Baltimore, then famous for its terrapin and since for its Mencken, casually enough to the mind of a well-to-do woman there came an idea that continues to grow and fruit.

The time had come for Mrs. Francis K. Cary to send her children away to boarding school, as had so long been the established custom in upper class American as well as English families. Like many other mothers, Mrs. Cary was loath to give her boys over wholly to a schoolmaster. The close companionship of master and boys in sport, the supervised study and other advantages of the boarding school, she found a way to bring to her boys without depriving herself.

Enthusing some of her neighbors who had children of the same age with a similar desire, and with the backing of President Daniel Coit Gilman of Johns Hopkins University, for whom the school was named, she started the first all day school in the country for poor little rich boys from the city.

The children, brought each morning from their city homes, were not turned loose for a long afternoon of activities on the city streets, or to spurious 'home work' under impossible conditions. On the contrary, they were kept till late afternoon on ample play fields amid the greenery of open country, supervised at healthy play or preparing the next day's work under guidance. This was the first country day school which went on quietly and almost unnoticed for ten years. When Frank S. Hackett in 1907 organized a similar school for New York City families he knew nothing of the Baltimore experiment. In the same year a former headmaster of the Gilman School opened the third country day school in Boston.

THE COUNTRY DAY SCHOOL EMERGES

Mrs. Cary's idea spread rapidly in the second decade, and today there is no metropolitan community of civic pride or educational progress that has not one or more country day schools. Everywhere day schools, responding to the demand, have remade their program and taken on, so far as their facilities and layout permit, the activities and functions of the country day school.

How many country day schools there are depends upon where the line is drawn, for most former day schools would like to use the title. In perhaps three hundred communities some attempt has been made to introduce Mrs. Cary's ideas. The Association of Country Day Schools formally recognizes by membership only those that come up to high standards of equipment and administration. Private initiative has generally been responsible for these schools. Occasionally a schoolmaster has seen the opportunity and sought the cooperation of influential parents. More frequently groups of parents have organized to supply a need for their children which the existing public and private schools had not met.

With control of a longer period of the child's day, with supervision of his activities and interests, there is less repression, less waste of energy. The country day school has shown us how to utilize time that was formerly wasted.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOLLOW PRIVATE SCHOOLS

In the city of Centerdale there is a well equipped and admirably administered country day school attended by the three Jones boys. Each morning the bus in charge of a teacher calls for them and each evening as darkness descends, returns with a happy group. Their work and play completed, they are ready and receptive for the pleasures of the family circle. The Snodgrass family who live opposite see all this. Their boys are out of school in the early afternoon, and if Mrs. Snodgrass sees them at all, it is for a fleeting glimpse before they're off on the streets, she knows not where. They turn up bedraggled, perhaps late for dinner, and around the living-room lamp pour over dog-eared text-books amid interruptions and with frequent questions which irritate tired father rustling his newspaper.

The Snodgrass family, anxious to keep up with the Joneses but not quite able to bear the expense of the country day school, inevitably begin to put pressure on the school board for afternoon supervised study and play, for the introduction of the country day school features. Alert public school men have in certain communities introduced some of the country day features of proved worth. Thus it is that the country day school is beginning to exert a wholesome and growing influence on the public schools.

So Mrs. Cary's plan which has made Baltimore a bright spot on the educational map is in a fair way to make possible for all the children of the nation the whole day education as on the old New England farm, where chores and household industries took up the slack before and after the day's schooling.

COLONEL PARKER STARTS SOMETHING

In the raw and windy city of Chicago in the hectic days following the World's Fair, another woman, Mrs. Emmons Blaine, started the progressive school movement in America. Sitting at the feet of John Dewey, professor in Chicago University, and inspired by his ideas, her interest and money made possible a school where his method might be worked out.

Experimental Schools, or Schools of Childhood at the Universities of Pittsburgh, Missouri, Bryn Mawr followed, perhaps influenced from Chicago. Some forty schools, calling themselves progressive, were established before the war.

The ancestor of all this in America was that same Colonel Parker of Quincy, Massachusetts who made the first progressive school move and later at the Cook County Normal School in Chicago, established a school and a tradition. Cecil Reddie, in his school at Abbotsholme which he established in 1880 in the north of England, was the one other seminal mind of the time in school work. Out of him through his pupils and disciples came the New School Movement of Europe. Badley who later established Bedales was a teacher here; Dr. Hermann Leitz who established the Landerziehungsheime in Germany in 1898 also taught at Abbotsholme, Edmond Desmoulins who opened the École des Roche in France was a journalist who visited Abbotsholme and wrote about it. The impetus given to modern education by Parker and Reddie on opposite sides of the Atlantic has taken on a different color from the personalities involved, but one has at times tinged the other.

All these progressive schools have varied in type as have the personalities that directed them. Sentimentality and false theory have been predominant in some, particularly here in America. Many have had their day and have been forgotten.

HARNESSING THE PUPIL'S ENERGY

But the mainspring of the whole movement has been and still is revolt against the artificial and traditional. With this there is an attempt to get away from mere book work and return to actuality, to decrease memorizing, to increase doing. Through interest in activities and projects the individual is brought to achievement and to the satisfaction that comes with it.

The more progressive schools, interested primarily in the natural activities of the child, regard the acquisition of knowledge as a by-product. The old type school equipped each child with a set of tools and loaded him down with knowledge without reference to his needs or where he was going. It was as if a caravan setting out to cross the Gobi had equipped its camel pullers with divers' helmets and laden the camels with water wheels.

The essence of the whole modern movement, which has perhaps unfortunately been labelled progressive, has been an attempt to utilize the pupil's own energy, to release his internal energy through interests and to direct it.

There is nothing new, nothing progressive about that, it is as old as the education that the she-bear gives her cubs; it is the same process that has made man efficient and has developed his potential capacities since he hunted the mammoth. Utilizing the child's internal energy is merely getting back to real things, away from the abstract book work to those activities that use his energy educatively. So we find the recess period in such a school not an explosion but a time for repair.

INTEREST BECOMES THE SPARK PLUG

It was DeGarmo, a public school man, who in the 'nineties, talking before 'Teachers' Institutes,' constantly emphasized the importance of pupil 'interest.' To those conscientious educators who looked upon the hard and disagreeable task mastered as the best means of character building and soul saving, this was soft, sloppy sentimentality. DeGarmo was a visionary, not harmless, but a destroyer of the faith of their fathers, who lowered ideals and degraded disciplinary values.

The spark plug that fires ambition and liberates internal energy which drives through to achievement we know today as 'interest.'

LEARNING TO USE ENERGY

Here in America, public utility companies tell us, each one of us has a thousand of slaves working for him daily, but once the only energy man could control was that produced by his own muscle. The bent bow enabled him to accumulate this muscle force, to release it suddenly, the spear-thrower to magnify it through leverage, the wheel or roller to accomplish more with the same energy.

Then, as had the ants millions of years before, he learned to utilize the muscular energy of others of his own species, then of other species and animals as they too were enslaved. The lash and the goad were the primitive spark-plugs of the time.

THE ROD IS REPUDIATED

In the educative process it was natural enough that the same methods should have been applied to children. Stimulus from without was depended on to release internal energy.

The rod had the sanction of the centuries for those who wished to transmit and perpetuate their ideas. The Jewish sacred writings urge us not to spare the rod. The Koran is still taught at the end of a rod to millions of mumbling children. Dr. Johnson, bewailing the decline of learning and the use of the rod in his time, complained that what the pupils gained at one end they lost at the other.

In England today it is only radicals and cranks that question the use of the rod. Flogging in the Public Schools of England is a time-honored institution which only sentimentalists deride. The future of the Empire depends upon it. Internal energy is still to be liberated by stimulation of the integument.

Here in America there has been a gradual change of attitude. Brookline, 'the wealthiest, most refined community' in the United States, did away with corporal punishment in its public school system in the fall of 1930. Not in repudiation of any theory of how the intellect was to be stimulated, not in repudiation of the Bible teaching, but rather shamefacedly because during two years there had been only three cases of corporal punishment. It had gone out of fashion.

THE NOSEBAG STILL APPEALS

The nosebag, the carrot lure, has started many a donkey impervious to the stick, and shrewd minds were quick to realize this. They devised houries, gardens with perfumed fountains for the desert dweller, golden streets and pearly gates for the Jew. Baubles, garters, titles, wealth upheld thrones.

Again the pedagog modified a method to his needs. Grades, marks, prizes, rewards, degrees were the nosebags that the academic dangled before the taught. Thus were attempts made to apply the internal energy of the young to the hard task.

DIRECTING AND REGULATING ENERGY

Man, like every organic creature, is a machine for using solar energy, transforming it, and giving it off in new forms. The flow of energy differs with the individual, his age and his type. Generally it reaches a maximum in early life and declines in later years. There are many types of transformer, many factors, physical, environmental, and psychic, affecting the metabolism and flow of energy. Of course, all this is tied up again with endocrine control, heredity, and temperamental differences. It is a complex subject in which research and observation are still needed, a subject as yet little known, but it is basal in the training of youth. All that can be done in this process of training youth is to help him to regulate the flow of this energy, to direct it into activities which, repeated, will build useful habits, which in turn will determine largely his psychological attitudes, his way of looking at things, his reactions to them and consequently his whole outlook upon the world; in fact, the whole character of his soul and mind.

LIBERATING SUPPRESSED ENERGIES

The progressive school, after all is said and done, has for its great achievement finding new ways of stimulating, directing and utilizing through interest the latent or suppressed energies of the child. This progressive education, then, reverts to the self-motivation of primitive man which antedates the use of slave methods and the invention of the various devices of rewards and punishments.

DANGERS OF SUPPRESSION

The men of vision, the seers and prophets of today, the psycho-analysts, all tell us that to save man and civilization from present psychoses, we must shake off the fetters of tradition, institution, the burden of self-conscious guilt due to the impossibility of conforming to false standards we have set up as sacred. We must get back into the stream of God's creative purposes, which made man what he is and may yet save him from race destruction for a possibly glorious future. The easy grade leads down to destruction and extinction; we may follow it burdened with our accumulations of the past. The other road leads up to a glorious future. We cannot make the grade without discarding our burden and developing new forces of energy. But today we are gradually discarding our infected rags of tradition and tabu and learning new ways of utilizing and directing the internal energy of the individual, energy which was heretofore wasted and neglected beyond our comprehension or control

VOLUME AND POWER

The ripple with which Colonel Parker broke the placid educational waters of the 'eighties ended the period of stagnation that naturally followed the Civil War. Then for two decades, from the vantage point of his great position, Charles W. Eliot blew steadily on the waters, creating a movement for the "enrichment of the curriculum." Through the 'eighties and 'nineties whirling eddies were set up by individuals, and conflicting and confused movements by groups. The traditional schools, up on the bar of formal discipline, jettisoned Greek to float along with Latin.

From the hills of private initiative, strong currents, the country day and progressive school movements, in the early nineteen hundreds give impulse to the sluggish stream. On the university heights Merriam at Missouri, Horne at Iowa, Chambers at Pittsburgh strike the barren rock, and springs gush forth from experimental schools and schools of childhood. From the psychological laboratories of Munsterburg at Harvard, Cattell and Thorndike at Columbia, comes a trickle of new and tested knowledge which precipitates the muddiness the stream has borne and further clarifies the waters.

Through the pre-war years the almost undiscerned current deepens and strengthens. With the ending of the war a dammed flood of idealism breaks forth and seemingly wastes its energies among the jagged rocks of war costs—"spits in the face of heaven." Through the 'thirties and 'forties the current swiftly carries us, struggling and half-unconscious, over dangerous rocks, through deep defiles out into the open country where we find ourselves thrown up on the shore of 1950.

BACK TO THE COUNTRY

Here in 1950 the population is less concentrated, the suburban fringes of the city finger out increasingly into the green country. The public schools, following the lead of the private country day schools of thirty years before, are now all out among open fields. Obsolete is the public school with confined gravelled playgrounds in the congested city. The rural school consolidation early in the century had shown the cities how to build educational centers in the country, despite transportation difficulties.

It was Governor Thibodeau in 1940 who formulated popular demand for better schools and won hands down. This success was in part due to the growing influence of the French Canadian element in New England politics.

But it was Mayor O'Connor of Boston who showed that the urban school property could be converted to commercial purposes at a profit to provide for the new system of country public schools to be developed.

These schools of 1950, following the popular demand created by the early Country Day school, carry on an all-day program and are community centers as well. Used for adult education in the evening and as mothers centers in the afternoon, when the children are out of doors, the increased dividends to the community that the plant thus yields have been an added factor in securing support from the taxpayer.

CONTINUOUS STRAIGHT LINE PRODUCTION

Here the educative process, too, goes on continuously twelve months in the year. The school plant of a generation ago was used twelve hundred hours a year. This school plant is used over five thousand hours a year. On Sundays it is a community centre for concerts, lectures and social activities. Made to yield such large social dividend, the community can afford to put increased capital into the plant, though this has not been found necessary.

The twelve month school year eliminates the void of the three months vacation that was absurdly left in our democratized school system of the early twentieth century, which the summer camp attempted to fill. At first, these summer camps were available only for the wealthy. But as their need and value were demonstrated, charitable organizations made them possible to larger numbers. Then communities and municipalities established them for the tubercular children who were most in need of this camp life.

THE OUTDOORS IS EDUCATIVE

In 1928 three-quarters of a million children were enrolled in summer camps, but at that time there were more than twenty million who were not having the benefits of this outdoor primitive life. Now in 1950 forty million children are being offered the advantages of outdoor life and activities then possible only in the organized summer camp.

Many of the educative activities of the camp program are now included in the all day, all year public school in the country. The summer void has been even better filled by continuing intellectual activities normally through the summer months. The skills which children develop so painfully in writing, or typewriting, in reading or speaking French are lost unless maintained through the summer months even at a reduced rate of activity.

So the tax-supported schools have taken over the function of the summer camp which had been demonstrated truly educative under private initiative. Many of these educational summer camp activities have been spread over the twelve months, and something of the school activities have been continued through the summer months. So our children are kept more or less in touch with the primitive. They get that something which only contact with nature can give, for which President Eliot pleaded. Through woodcraft and campcraft they learn to utilize their energies usefully, as did the children brought up on the old New England farmstead.

Let us visit one of these schools for children from eight to fourteen, the 1950 substitute for the old grammar school.

UNCONSCIOUS EDUCATION

From the center of the city we are whisked through a clean, airy subway and in a few minutes come to the surface in a great plaza. We are in what we used to call a park. The trees and plants, we notice, carry explanatory labels, each an interesting story. A label halts us, thrusts something at our mind, so we look again at the tree, interested. We read:

"The Paddock Elm. The ancestors of this tree were first brought to Boston by a Mr. Paddock about 1760. Planted on Boston Common opposite the State House, they were still living in 1931. The trees came from England, introduced to the British Isles a thousand years before from southern Europe."

Another label, with an arrow pointing upward, reads: "Gray squirrels. Observe the nest, forty feet above, constructed of leaves and branches. Here the young are reared. The builders of this nest, brother and sister, are the tenth generation known to have been born and to have lived within one thousand feet of this spot. No new blood of the species has been introduced, so far as we know."

Passing hurriedly on we notice scores of other labels which experience makes us anxious to read. In this laboratory facts are so interestingly presented in relation to other facts and to the life of man that knowledge formerly uninteresting in watertight compartments within book covers becomes appetizing.

We recall how all this started with the "Nature Trail" movement begun by Lutz and Vinal along in the late 'twenties, how back of this lay the concept which came earlier in the century that a "museum could be a collection of explanatory labels illustrated by objects."

A glimpse through the shrubbery reveals an open space in which perhaps two score boys and girls are busily at work with tools and wheelbarrows. We stop to inquire

GEOGRAPHY BY DOING

"Oh, they're building a relief map of South America. It's about sixty feet long. Each geography group constructs under supervision a relief map of one of the continents or some region, in detail. Photographs for our permanent records are made on completion of the model and the space is then cleared for the next group. The work of the different groups is judged and honors awarded by comparison of the photographs. The preservation of these photographs has resulted in gradually raising the standard of our modelling technique. We learn from those who go before."

It is remarkable what an amount of research some boys and girls can put on a sixty-foot map of a continent. One that was completed last month, for instance, showed the natural distribution in the Amazon valley of the Para rubber tree, 'Hevea,' as well as the distribution of the four species of llama in the Andean region. The large scale of the model permitted fairly accurate representations of the rubber trees as well as the guanaco, alpaca and other llama species.

This is learning by doing. The students here use muscle and nerve constantly in an ordered way building useful motor habits. Whether consulting books as sources for geographical facts, or seeking raw materials for models, or making tools to achieve their purpose, they are getting training in resourcefulness; concrete, visual achievement affords them reward for initiative. This kind of motor training may be transferable to future vocation or avocation, as was the farm boy's.

SATISFYING PRIMITIVE URGES

It is this acquisition through doing that satisfies the acquisitive traits so strong in many of us and which in the past has been perverted to baser economic ends. Moreover, each of us, child or adult, spends his chief energy in maximizing his own ego. Motivated activities lead to habit forming and afford a means of satisfying the urge for mastery which we all have.

The fault with our education of the past was that we failed to recognize this internal urge for mastery as the great force which might be harnessed, guided, directed to work for the benefit of the individual and society in the building of character-forming habits. Allowed to run wild, these forces worked for the harm of the individual and filled our asylums and penitentiaries.

THE MUSEUM LABORATORY

We go on and stand in the central pavilion. Wings stretch off to the right and left and we catch glimpses of courtyards and patios. Everywhere are hurrying feet, busy groups and the apparent, ordered confusion of a shipyard. Before a large bulletin board we pause.

"Here's a floor plan that shows, I see, the arrangement of the building. Apparently you have a group of rooms for each subject in the curriculum. Let's visit the mathematics section."

"Yes, there is a laboratory center for each subject with its own museum, collections, models, books, exhibits, record office and conference rooms. Most of the materials, of course, have been prepared by the pupils, the best of whose work is preserved from year to year as a model and incentive."

"How can you do this for mathematics, an abstract subject? Won't you show me?"

MATHEMATICS AND ART

On the walls of the corridor we traverse I notice mural paintings, some incomplete. Boys and girls are at work on others. Here an ancient Egyptian scribe makes mathematical notations on his tablet, a Hindu traces algebraic symbols in the smooth sand; a Chinese bookkeeper draws with abacus, brush and ink-stone; a Roman clerk with stylus and wax makes his numerals, an Arab inscribes modern figures on parchment. Further on are idealized portraits of Aryabhata, Euclid, Gallileo and other famous mathematicians. All these are paintings contributed by the art-minded students working under joint guidance of the art and mathematics directors, as my guide explains.

"Yes, cooperation and coordination are expected between departments. Each pupil is the center on which the director of each department focuses. The response in the pupil to the appeals of the different subjects determines what coordinations as, for example, art and mathematics, will prove most profitable for him. You will remember that we now consider that no subject is essential to any pupil except and only as it arouses a response and leads him to exercise faculties that would otherwise remain latent, or as it equips him for some greater end he has beyond."

As we enter the first room of the mathematics wing a collection of models made of paper, wood, wire and glass meet my gaze. I notice particularly a cone of transparent pyroxylin. The guide tells me that it was constructed by a boy of twelve who, in following the study of solid geometry, became interested in conic sections.

"In this museum, as in all of those of the different departments," he said, "most of the exhibits have been done by the students themselves, guided and helped by experts "

A large library filled with charts and books on mathematics opens off the museum. Beyond this is a large lecture room and the departmental offices. Nearby are several conference rooms in which the boys and girls are working and discussing together.

We see a boy of ten years busily at work, making a model of a dissected cylinder. With pride he shows me his collection of models and drawings. He has developed a great interest in solid geometry. I find that he knows no algebra and little arithmetic. In response to my astonishment, my guide explains,

"We let the pupils follow their own inclinations in mathematics. We find they work more intensively and gain more by so doing. This boy is following the course of his ancestors in his interest in solids. Do you realize that hundreds of millions of men have lived who couldn't count the fingers on one hand and still had to have a thorough understanding of solids—tree trunks, arrow shafts?"

THE THRILL OF DISCOVERY

"We emphasize the history of mathematics, the thrill and adventure that came to man in discovering new mathematical relationships. The director of the school thinks that every child should get the thrills of discovery that have come to his ancestors, that this is a part of his life heritage. The joy of the child today who discovers that it is three times as far around a tree as through it is just as keen as it was to the first primitive man who discovered it for himself."

THE TEACHER DISCOVERS THE INDIVIDUAL

The individual method by which each child progresses at his own pace was introduced in the first quarter of this century and was best known as the Winnetka and Dalton plans. It was Francis Burke at the San Francisco Normal School who first attempted to break the lockstep in education and make all instruction individual. But Carleton Washburne at Winnetka first proved to the taxpayer that individual instruction was more economical than the old class method with its costly repeaters. Nor was failure necessary. Each child may attain one hundred percent for he follows a pace which fits his heredity and time reactions.

THE PUPILS SALES RESISTANCE

The old-time teacher, like the old-time merchant, was obliged to overcome high sales resistance in disposing of his limited stock of goods. This required craft, high pressure and sometimes dishonesty. The elimination of friction and waste has reduced the cost of merchandising for both of these. With self-motivated activities on the part of these school children, there is no resistance to overcome. Thus no child fails or repeats.

Every subject of the curriculum, I found, was organized about a center with its museum, charts, laboratories, work shops, filing cases for clippings, permanent exhibits of the pupils' best work. Passing rapidly through the museum laboratories, I saw how each child was put in competition not merely with his fellows but with former pupils through the exhibition of their best work. What incentive was here, how inevitably knowledge must come as a result of activity so stimulated!

NEW METHODS REDUCE COSTS

It was back in the early nineteen thirties that Americans became awakened to the possibilities of museum education. In 1925 in the report of the New York Museum of Natural History, Henry Fairfield Osborn emphasized the low cost of museum education. In that year he said, five teachers gave instruction to six million pupils. In the public schools 29,000 teachers instructed one million; in Columbia 7,000 teachers had only 32,000 students. Muller at the Deutsches Museum in Munich had made science and industry concrete and vivid for the working man casually walking through those nine miles of exhibits and experiments. Great American industrialists who had visited this museum were inspired to provide for similar developments in this country. Henry Ford established a museum at Dearborn. Marshall Field left a fund of several millions for another in Chicago, and Henry Towne of Yale lock fame left an equal sum for the museum in New York. But it remained for the Federal Commissioner of Education under President Gifford in 1940 to demonstrate that this kind of museum education was practical for ten year old boys and girls in the grammar schools.

Looking at a thing doesn't wear it out. We learn more readily through the eye than through the ear. The resistance is less. Every dollar put into a museum will continue to yield dividends over a long period of time and will save many dollars that would otherwise be wasted.

So in this school every department has its museum. Most of the exhibits are worked out by pupils with competent assistance from museum experts.

THE PLEASURE OF READING

I wish I could tell you how languages are taught in this school. The mother tongue, genesis and history, is made of fundamental interest. Sounds and color of words, the units of the language, are subjects for cultivation and appreciation. With this feeling and interest in words, the ability to look them straight in the face, children can be saved from mis-spelling. Formerly we made our mis-spellers in school by creating the opportunity, just as once upon a time we made liars and thieves of children. Such opportunities can be controlled.

THE JOY OF WRITING

Writing the language is here today as it was originally, not an academic exercise, but a means of recording, communicating and expressing. Records are made of activities and researches. Reports are written for reading before classes, assemblies or department directors. The best of these are permanently bound for the section libraries and serve not merely as incentives but put the child in competition with children of his own particular group as well as with others who have gone before.

Having made books in this way boys and girls know better how to appreciate books that others have made, using them as tools, as storehouses for second-hand information, as sources of inspiration. It is the purpose to make this pupil of 1950 sufficiently familiar with books as sources so that he may find the kind of help or comfort he needs when he wants it. There is no required reading as formerly which did so much to create a distaste for books.

OTHER PEOPLES LANGUAGES

Modern and ancient languages are considered of value and importance insofar as they contribute to an understanding of the one language that should be mastered. Before 1930 schools had begun to develop what they called courses in General Language for children in the grammar grades. This meant some comparative study of the principal European languages and how they were related. Today the comparative study of languages in a fundamental and elementary way provides for all children an interesting approach to the conscious study of language.

Since 1940 a lesser number of children study foreign languages, either ancient or modern, except in this fundamental and comparative way. During the first thirty years of this century an average of ten million pupils gave to the study of foreign languages one-third of their time, that is, one-third of a total of three hundred million study years were devoted to foreign languages. The absurdity of this is apparent when you pause to consider how little of these hundred million years of effort have proved of use. It was a hang-over from the time when the study of useless things was considered good mental discipline.

Those boys and girls who show special facility are today afforded the easiest and most practical way of perfecting the chosen language. They have an opportunity of residing for months at a time at established centers in the country whose language they wish to master. Is the expense prohibitive? No, the actual amount spent by the taxpayer on foreign language teaching today is probably but a small fraction of what was uselessly spent thirty years ago, for the expensive and futile teaching of the millions who never used the language has been eliminated. Those who study here are intensively motivated in an environment where they can learn more readily.

HOW KNOWLEDGE COMES

Each child concentrates and works hard, for his interest is in accomplishment, in getting his work done. Each one is working at his own individual pre-arranged program. In building a model of the Parthenon, in constructing his television set, he may use books, photographs, slide rule or micrometer as sources of information or as tools.

It is the function of his director to see that he is put in touch with the source of information or inspiration that he needs at the time he needs it. This may be from direct observation or at second-hand through books. When a child is sent to a book it is particularly to get the specific knowledge that he needs for his immediate purpose. There are so many books in the world that there is no reason why he should master even special chapters on related subjects. What is emphasized is that useless knowledge is a clog in the system, something to be excreted if possible, not to be absorbed.

The original purpose of knowing was to aid in doing. So knowledge, at least that which sticks, is acquired as a by-product. The real work of the world has been accomplished by inventors, engineers and business executives who, unburdened by useless knowledge, have mastered the facts they needed when they needed them. They have not carried their carpenters tools with them when they have shifted to a plumbers trade.

THE PROBLEM OF MANAGEMENT

The directing staff, then, is concerned with management. They are not to supply knowledge but to point the way to it; not to supply energy but to stimulate it, not to do but to make achievement possible, but not too easy. It is the function of the management to see that the load is adjusted to the capacity of the worker That means re-adjustment from time to time The old-time school teacher, book in hand, working off what he knows and what he thinks the child should learn, is not only as obsolete as the dodo, but would be considered as harmful as the Tyrannosaurus

ELIMINATING WASTE

It would be considered as wasteful in this school to have much talking to the children, as it would have been in 1930 to have had much talking to skilled workers in a factory These children of 1950 are scientifically managed with as much skill, intelligence, efficiency, economy of energy, and eye to result, as were the factory workmen of a quarter of a century ago. The staff must inspire, reduce friction, eliminate waste of time and energy They are, in fact, applying to the management of children's activities and self-education the methods that were worked out by the Taylor School of Scientific Management earlier in the century in the steel mills and the factories

We in 1950 are no longer interested in molding youth nor in passing on traditional practices The education of the early part of this century poured into the individual a charge of miscellaneous knowledge. It loaded down the adolescent with useless tools and skills. Now we are interested in aiding the individual to growth, in building good and efficient intellectual habits and psychological attitudes, in training, conditioning and accustoming him to inevitable achievement

The former wasted energy of the individual has been eliminated and his own internal energies released and applied to educational processes This began more or less unconsciously in the country day schools and in the progressive schools at the beginning of the century. As the better of the methods so worked out have been perfected during the last twenty years we have become consciously aware that our social problems are merely the problems that arise from groups of maladjusted individuals Most of our domestic problems, marriage and divorce, our family problems, the restlessness of youth, have proved to be problems of adjustment. With each individual realizing his potentialities more fully, trained in useful forms of self-expression, to attain larger achievement and success under wiser direction and consequently getting a bigger kick out of daily living through useful and helpful doing,—each individual is happier.

There is less maladjustment. The mental hygiene of our people has improved. With this our prisons and asylums have emptied. Our old social problems are disappearing and we are ready for new and bigger ones.

SOME BOOKS OF THE YEAR

Books and ideas are not unrelated to schools and educational procedure. Schools give a large proportion of their time to language, chiefly to the printed word. The number of books published and volumes sold is some indication of the use of books and possibly of the reading habits of a people. Statistics of publishing and bookselling then may be used to measure the success of our schools with their former pupils in establishing reading habits and training them in the use of books.

DECREASE IN BOOKS PUBLISHED

The steadily rising curve in the number of books published in this country shows a drop for the year 1930, but as many publishing contracts are made in advance the effect of the depression may continue to show during the current year.

The number of titles published in 1930, as reported by The Publishers Weekly, showed a slight decrease from the number published in 1929. There were 8,134 new titles as compared with 8,343 in 1929. The total of new titles and new editions was 10,027 in 1930 and 10,187 in 1929. The greatest increases in 1930 were 54 in Biography, 39 in Sociology, 38 in Science, 28 in Religion, 25 in Fine Arts, 14 in History and 12 in Geography. The decreases were 84 in Medicine, 77 in Education, 44 in Philology, 41 in Law, 33 in General Literature, 31 in Poetry and Drama and 11 in Philosophy.

The total number of volumes published as reported by the United States Census of Manufactures taken every two years also showed a decrease. The books published in 1929 cost $103,914,750, an increase of 8.8% over the cost, $178,162,753, of books published in 1927. In 1929, 435,195,833 books and pamphlets were published as against 470,374,947 in 1927. Nearly half of this total were pamphlets.

IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Great Britain, in contrast, had the most prolific year in its publishing history, 15,393 titles were published as against 14,086 in 1929. These figures include books and pamphlets published for sale, not government publications. In new titles, translations, new editions or pamphlets there was an increase, and the figures are in excess of the corresponding number of this country, 9,907 in 1930 as compared with 8,927 in 1929.

Great Britain it must be remembered has a great export trade in books, not only to her own commonwealth and colonies, but to the whole English speaking world. Foreign books imported into the United States showed a decrease in value during the past year, but there is a steadily increasing export of American books to foreign countries, chiefly to English speaking countries, — Canada, Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand and to the Philippines, Japan and China.

In France and Germany for the last three years there has been a falling off in the number of titles published. The same is true for practically all western European countries.

USES OF CELLULOSE

The increase in paper costs and book production, and the consequent decrease in the number of books published, are not unrelated to preceding events. The price of commodities we find is following the same curve as at a similar period after the Napoleonic wars and other periods of great destruction. To make smokeless powder and other explosives, vast quantities of wood pulp and other forms of cellulose were used which might otherwise have been available for paper. We have learned that we can't use the same cellulose to shoot lead into peoples bodies and also to shoot ideas into their brains. If repetition of the same cause is again to reduce book production, then our schools must modify some of their standards and ideals so that our forests may be converted into means of spreading ideas instead of spreading machine gun bullets.

WE DO NOT READ BOOKS

Of the 235,360,032 books published in 1930, 80,189,935 were text books and 36,885,167 were juveniles. This left 118,284,930 books for the 122,775,046 inhabitants of the United States as reported by the 1930 census. 45,880,162 of these books were fiction, which left about half a non-fiction book for each inhabitant to supply our schools, colleges, libraries, our lawyers and law libraries, our churches with prayer and hymn books.

What a small residue of really solid thoughtful books from which to derive new ideas were left for the individual! The highly organized and successful publishing and bookselling trade or profession in 1930 did not succeed in selling even one book for each individual in the United States. We are not a book reading public.

SCHOOLS DO NOT TEACH READING

That the schools are not doing all they should to cultivate good habits and tastes in reading is a growing belief on which we have reported in this Handbook during the past three years. Without the aid of teachers or encouragement from the schools we have become a nation of newspaper readers and have learned to get our information, recreation and inspiration from radio, movie and talkie

To read fruitfully requires training. Reading is an unsocial, second-hand, sedentary, artificial way of acquiring knowledge. There are more modern methods which are made attractive and in which our people are being assiduously trained. The movie, the talkie, the strip cartoon and Mickey Mouse are proving efficient educators. Their pupils are avid for more. A film of Tolstoi's book within a few weeks resulted in the sale of 50,000 copies of "Anna Karenina."

Hundreds of thousands of teachers of English and literature have labored daily for two generations with hundreds of millions of pupils to teach the use of books. As a result we, as a people, have an aversion for books. In searching for causes some go so far as to point out that our teachers are not well read, that they don't use books widely or wisely and that they are essentially ignorant of modern trends as revealed in recent books and consequently in no position to establish real interest or tastes in reading. It is little wonder that our schools try to justify their existence as character builders rather than on the old basis of teaching reading.

DEMOCRACY AND BOOKS

We Americans spend as much every three or four weeks on movies and talkies as we do on books in twelve months. (On pleasure touring we spend twenty times as much as on recreational reading. For each book he buys, the American smokes six hundred cigarettes. These are some of the points brought out by R. L. Duffus, Books: Their Place in a Democracy, Houghton Mifflin, 1930. This was a study undertaken for the Carnegie Corporation to ascertain if the American people could be made book minded. Mr. Duffus deals largely with the machinery of distribution of books and believes that it can be improved to sell more books. Of course it was to help booksellers and publishers that this study was made and he challenges publishers and booksellers to make more readers, and authors to make their books more readable.

In response to Mr. Duffus' book W. T. Couch, Assistant Director of the University of North Carolina Press, has a leading article in The Publishers Weekly for August, 1930, bearing the following title and carrying this quotation at its masthead:

PROPOSAL TO EDUCATE OUR EDUCATORS

"Until educators are better educated, until they show a more lively and genuine interest in books, until they realize the plain and simple function of books as practically indispensable intellectual food, it is doubtful whether the general public interest and appreciation will increase."

There are four large organized groups in this country, Mr. Couch points out, that are primarily concerned with the promotion of books. Of these two groups, teachers and librarians, are generally supported by public funds or private endowment, but the other two, publishers and booksellers, have no such security. They are able to continue only so long as there is demand for their wares.

The publisher can only supply the demand of our tastes and reading habits. The schools, Couch maintains, not merely fail to create such demands but do their part in destroying interests that might otherwise exist. To improve the taste of readers, is simply—to educate. Both Mr. Duffus and Mr. Couch agree that schools and colleges are so much taken up with curriculum requirements and degrees that it interferes with the development of good mental habits and intellectual interests, which is merely saying that schools and colleges interfere with education.

"If our teachers do not know enough, and do not have intellectual power enough to use schedules and requirements to advantage in their teaching, then what we need to do is not to ignore the schools and the teachers but try to rejuvenate them."

"I believe, therefore, that the first and most important task in educating the American public to the values and uses of books is to educate the educators, to persuade them to read and own a few books."

The truth is, our educators keep their noses close to the grindstone. Their outlook is limited, they don't read books. Consequently, it is beyond most of them to stimulate in their pupils a real and vital interest in books or desire for the kind of knowledge that is abreast of the times.

One of the most enlightened and progressive of head masters, visiting the home of a pupil whose marks in algebra and Latin were running low, remarking that he was reading Wells' "Outline," was astonished to learn that the boy had read it years before and in the few days of his vacation had read a good part of Wells' "Science of Life." The head master's interest in the evidence of art and travel in the home did not overcome his greater enthusiasm for his latest discovery, the new Gillette blade, which he had used for over a month. Most school masters read few books and mostly those that are well seasoned.

WHAT BOOKS ARE OF EDUCATIONAL IMPORT?

Books are windows letting us look into the lives and activities of others, or into regions otherwise unknown. Books are tools which help us, through the recorded experiences of others, to arrive at our ends. Books put us in touch with the thoughts of other minds and other times which make available to us the heritage of the race.

In bringing recent books to the attention of parents and educators, who are supposedly intent on helping children and youth to realize their greater potentialities, there is no desire to print academic book reviews, but to point out books that will enlarge horizons, give a sense of proportion, a better interpretation of human problems and especially those of childhood and adolescence. This is a modern need. Then too, is it not well that we should know what the thinkers are thinking and where the thrill of discovery still lies?

No longer have we the certitude of preceding generations whose views were established by some hierarchy. Our Calvinist forefathers believed, and their children chanted that the chief end of man was "To glorify God and exalt Him forever." Today few see life so simply. New light and interpretation must come to most of us through books by which the great thinkers and the discoverers on the frontiers of knowledge make known to us new revelations.

LIFE'S STORY

It is our teachers that need this new revelation more than others. Their outlook has been limited, their training was that of an earlier generation and recent studies show that few of them read books other than those dealing with professional activities and traditional practices. The whole story of man is gradually being revealed to us in a way to open new possibilities, to give us new faith and new incentive.

And God said, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of Heaven. And God created whales and every living creature that moveth." This is the beginning of the story of life which our fathers were taught from the Book of Genesis. On such Hebrew tradition has been built much of our social and legal structure. How different is the story of life set before us in recent books.

The Parade of The Living, Coward-McCann, 1930, by John Hodgdon Bradley, entertainingly popularizes the paleontological story of life. The author confesses that he "has used the vocabulary of man simply because that of oysters is unknown to him." From the earliest life in the ocean to the conquest of the land by the amphibian, the story of animal and plant life is followed. Bipedal dinosaurs "prodded on by the death at their heels, rose off their bellies and ran like kangaroos." Flippancy he tells of the discoveries of paleontologists up even to the 1930 Peking man of two million years ago. The Scientific Book Club selected this entertaining account of the greatest story in the world.

The educational and publishing event of the year is Wells' long-heralded The Science of Life, Doubleday Doran, 1931. In 1928 in "The Open Conspiracy" (see page 38 of the 13th edition of this Handbook), Wells definitely announced this was to be the second part of his great trilogy, of which the first was "The Outline of History" and the third the still-projected "Conquest of Power." The sensational advertising of the publishers will repel many, but is shrewdly calculated to attract thousands who otherwise would not read such a book. Already many of the reviewers recognize that this sweeping panorama of life will have as profound an effect as has the author's previous "Outline."

The hand of the story teller is everywhere evident although Wells generously gives equal credit to his son and to the grandson of the great Huxley, both scientists of training and standing, who doubtless arranged the material. Easy and fascinating reading as it is for any high school pupil, yet Tom Barbour, the Harvard zoologist, tells us that anyone who knows its contents could easily pass the examination for the Ph D degree in biology at Harvard.

Beginning with the human body as the biological unit with which one is best acquainted is good pedagogy, and so we learn about our own cells, blood, nutrition, excretion, locomotion, and origin from the microscopic fertilized egg. The next three parts deal with the Incontrovertible Fact of Evolution about which so many qualifications and modifications have led to great confusion. From the rocks, development, variation and distribution, the facts are interestingly brought together and we are shown the progress of man from simpler forms, with much attention to the missing links of years ago.

In the fourth part we are told of the how and why of the development of genetics, the youngest of the biological sciences,—of the chromosomes, so fateful for our children,—of the determination of sex, of mutation. The fifth part goes with more detail into the history of life upon the earth. Environment and its effect is stressed in the remainder of the book. Ecology, or the interrelation between organisms and the various niches of the environment in which they dwell, is dealt with in the sixth part of the book.

In the seventh part we learn of disease, immunity, vitamins and some of the causes of death. The eighth part has to do with the psychology of man and animals. The final chapter discusses religion, war, population and its control, and eugenics.

Such a sweeping summary can give no idea of the interest with which the story is told. The narrative is relieved by detailed stories which bring relief and diversion and maintain interest. The work stands the criticism of trained scientists except perhaps the narrow specialist who may be disgruntled with the treatment of his own subject. It avoids unnecessarily exciting prejudices. It distinguishes clearly what is proved and what is theory. It frankly admits and defines the limits of knowledge. Possibly a Jesuit, permitted to have introduced a little more of the language of Faith, Hope and Charity, might have saved the work from some of the contemptuous reviews it is likely to receive in some religious publications.

The advance of science is so rapid that of course the work will have to be revised but it stands as a monument of noble conception, of great faith, of untiring industry and great pedagogical and literary skill.

If you would understand the life, the body, the mind of yourself and of others who have lived during these millions of years and how it all came about and what it may lead to, this is the first best book on this great story of creation, and it is as interestingly and as well told as Genesis, if longer and more detailed.

EARTH'S CHILDREN

There is a growing admiration for our ancestors as we come to know them better. This modern ancestor worship goes back for tens of thousands of years to the origin of our primitive virtues, the development of our brain and the art of delineating the living model in movement. The reindeer wading the swift stream in the cold sleet and turning back to look at her following calf, scratched on ivory 25,000 years ago, remains an unsurpassed example of this art. This is illustrated on page 23 of Luguet's Art and Religion of Fossil Man, Yale University Press, 1930.

Ten years ago the trail of ancient man led back vague and broken for a million years and more, but the gaps are rapidly filling as new finds are made and new species of men come to light. No one has played a more active part in following this trail than Sir Arthur Keith, who spent his youth studying man in the jungles of the East, and who is now conservator of the greatest anatomical museum in the world. His earlier book, "The Antiquity of Man," now in its seventh edition, has become a classic. In New Discoveries Relating to the Antiquity of Man, Norton, 1931, Keith describes the many recent discoveries of fossil man which have been made in the last five years. He describes the Taungs skull from South Africa, the new finds in Egypt and Palestine, the recently discovered and now famous Peking Man, and even more recent fossil skull dug up under a London pavement, and the bones of a Neanderthal man found at the gates of modern Rome. Even more strange is the discovery of a modern man who represents a complete throwback to the primitive.

Since the War history has been rewritten by the story teller, Van Loon, the anthropologist, Eliot Smith, the psychologist, J. H. Denison, the esthete, Clive Bell, the novelist, Wells, and each in his own way. Now the geologist, in the person of that lively occupant of the chair at Harvard, Kirtley F. Mather, presents his view of history in his Sons of the Earth, Norton, 1930, which is dedicated "To That Unknown Ancestor of Mine" who was first promoted "From a Paradise of Contentment Into a World of Problems."

Mather is nobly carrying on the geological Harvard tradition established by Shaler a third of a century ago. As no one else up to that time, Shaler imparted to his students the million year vision. His lectures were moving pictures of the experiments of mother nature. In ten minutes Shaler would span a great organic experiment such as that of the Ammonites through all their ramifications to their decline, from the Silurian to the Mesozoic. Mather in the first two chapters turns rapidly the rock leaves of "Mother Earth's Diary" and traces "The Stream of Life" through to the mammals. Then with him we climb "The Family Tree of the Higher Vertebrates" and follow "Man's Ancestral Lineage" through the last few thousand years since Homo appeared. The oldest relics of Homo are not his bones but his art, the product of his industry, the eoliths of the Tertiary. We can trace the correlated development of hand and brain through four or five known species of Homo by the tools he fashioned as well as by his bones and dwelling places.

This gives a view over the history of man extending back several million years before our own wise species emerged. Sapiens is a biological sport, a major mutation with a swelled head and a penchant for art.

But to the earliest species that were exterminated we are indebted for most of our heritage, the discovery and mastery of fire, the development and use of tools, the art of cooking—and what has sapiens done since to compare with these? Moreover, our "belief in the continuity of life after death and in the reality of a spirit world is actually older than the existing human species."

The story of the "First Families of America" who reached this continent thirty or forty thousand years ago, while the camel and the elephant were still extant in America, accounts for the elephant motif in Maya sculpture and the "record of a Maya feast about the year 400 A.D. at which mastodon meat was served." "The Heritage from Mother Earth" sums up the story of organic change and progress. Not all organic forms have progressed and few equally. Today fossil brachiopods in the Cambrian cliffs along the coast of Wales are weathered out of the rocks and fall into the sea where still live their descendants unchanged these millions of years. In constant and peaceful conditions of light and temperature below sea level certain species have remained unchanged since Silurian times, they are the original Silurian stand-patters.

Mather tells us of how the continents were ploughed through, how tropic waters spread across North America to the arctic, how central Asia saw the Himalayan crest forced up. Amid such drastic changes in the earth's crust only those species that could adapt themselves survived. These were few, yet in the one group of insects we have today 700,000 that have been named. These are but the tag-end of Mother Nature's handiwork, traces of which were fossilized in ancient mud flats. The survivors have been the descendants, not of the conservative elements of these species, but of the radicals who were alert, changing enough to survive amid the filling of the seas and the building of the mountains. This is the story of survival and success.

As John Burroughs said, nature hits the mark because she shoots in all directions, and so her failures are greater than her successes. We are the result of her small percentage of successes, and the great majority of us will give birth to nothing but failures. For only those will survive who can discern inevitable change and adapt themselves to it. Holding back the hand of Mother Nature may prolong existence for an instant only to make inevitable disaster more complete.

"The Outlook for the Future," the final chapter, is, like the others, preceded by some poetic lines. These are from Charles Hanson Towne, "I like the road that wanders straight; the King's highway is fair, and lovely are the sheltered lanes that take you here and there, but best of all I love a road that leads to God knows where."

With the geologist's range of vision, Mather looks out of the dark tunnel of the past into the distant future, sure of direction, but uncertain of what may be encountered in the cosmic space amid whirling spheres and flying comets.

Philosophically and reassuringly he advises us that "it is probably unwise and certainly unnecessary for us to worry about the future, millions of years hence. . . . Even our most 'forward-looking citizens' rarely project their thoughts more than two or three hundred years into the future. . . . The probable trend of human history during the next ten thousand years can be intelligently considered only in the light of the past development of the race. During the twenty-five thousand years immediately preceding the Christian era, the existing species of humankind multiplied rapidly and populated the entire face of the earth."

The population of the earth has doubled within the memory of man, seventy-five years. Now one and three-quarter billion, it will double again in one hundred and ten years, this under the restricted birth rate that has come with present methods of contraception. Unless these methods are improved and become more widespread, the Catholic heavens will be filled with increasing millions of starved infants.

There are but two alternatives, either to kill or prevent. In maintaining a maximum number of lives on a given food supply, the termites have evolved methods vastly more efficient than has man, but in so doing they have sacrificed the individual to the mass.

"In the past evolution, influenced and directed by the environmental forces inherent in the earth, has proved itself progressive. At each crisis, a minority somewhere has responded to the challenge of the moment. As we face the future, there is in consequence abundant reason for an optimistic outlook. Somewhere among the sons of the earth are individuals ready, willing and able to respond to the challenge of today and tomorrow. They are a small minority, struggling against the overburden of a complacent and conservative majority; but similar minorities have been victorious heretofore."

THE DEEPENING STREAM OF HISTORY

Ancient history began with Lycurgus as Plutarch knew him, when most school principals studied it. Homer loomed in the legendary background and as a concession to Herodotus, the Bible, and the pyramids, something of the history of Egypt and Mesopotamia were recognized. It was this out-moded and limited history of a generation ago that doubtless led Henry Ford to conclude that "history is bunk." Archeologists everywhere have pushed back the veil. Even more than in Buckle's time history must be rewritten for the new generation.

Delving into the rubbish and filth heaps of ancient cities the archeologist recreates the story of their lives and industries. Schliemann at Troy, Evans at Knossos have been followed by a host of people, and the story of eastern civilization now reaches back, with breaks, to the Neolithic age, 10,000 B.C.

Minoans, Philistines, and Greeks, Kegan Paul, 1930, is a title that conveys little of the thrill that is in this book. For here is a narrative history of the Aegean peoples for the five hundred years before Homer. It opens with a picture of Knossos in its prime and its sport and beauty-loving people. "The Rise of Aegean Civilization" is traced to "The Golden Age" and "The Destruction of Knossos." Then the sunset of this Minoan civilization is reflected in the Mycenaean cities of the mainland. We become familiar with The Sea Raiders and The Great Migrations that precede Homeric events. Contemporary stories of this are given in their original form. The Cruise of the Argo is translated into historical terms and the historical setting and background set up for the Homeric story.

A. B. Burn, the author, of Christ Church, Oxford, admits that this history is premature, but if he had waited until the time was mature, someone else would have written it and it would have been left for our descendants to read. So I, for one, am extremely grateful that he did the thing that caution would naturally have prompted him to desist from. For I have gotten a tremendous thrill, living and sailing the Aegean, these five hundred years before Homer.

There is evidence of a complete knowledge of every fragment of ancient writing as well as every modern article on archaeology and palaeography. Minutely documented and heavily footnoted, he will be difficult to challenge in the light of our present knowledge, but the next turn of the spade may make his learning obsolete and his narrative false.

Sons of Minos, Robert McBride, 1930, by David Cheney, is an attempt at an historical novel of this same period. It follows the model of historical novels of other periods and lacks the skill and facsimilitude of the preceding work.

How the archaeologist has prepared the stream of history is nowhere more convincingly presented than in the following summary of sanitation and open plumbing quoted from James A. Tobey's Riders of the Plagues, Scribner's, 1930.

"Sanitation is not new at all, but an art with a heritage of thousands of years of actual experience and application. To be sure, there was a distressing interlude of several centuries when sanitation was forgotten and neglected, but its beginnings go back to the days of Imhotep and Ptolemy, to those of Hippocrates and Galen, of Moses and Asoka.

"The unremitting labors of the archaeologist have uncovered traces of true sanitary science in the early empires of Assyria and Babylonia, in Egypt and Crete, in Greece and Rome. Sanitary science, dealing with the healthfulness of the environment and not solely with the individual, was developed far more extensively and efficiently by these olden people than was medical science, which was interwoven with magic and was thought by primitive races to be the gift of the gods.

"When it is considered that the city of London had no sewerage system whatever until the eighteenth century after Christ, the advanced sanitation of these cities of twenty centuries before the Christian era cannot fail to stimulate our admiration

"In 2000 B C the profession of physician had become somewhat perilous, for the famous code of Hammurabi, the earliest compilation of laws, contained severe penalties for medical malpractice. If a physician should operate on a man and cause his death or destroy his sight, it was writ that his hands should be cut off

"Discoveries made in the recently excavated city of Mohenjo-daro, situated on the west bank of the Indus, 1,500 miles from Babylon, have been described by Sir Arthur Keith in these words 'As regards sanitary engineering, this city of ancient Sind led the way, no city that can claim to be 5,000 years old so nearly approached our modern standard of sanitation as does Mohenjo-daro. We know how well laid were the bath-room floors, with latrines occupying recesses in the wall. We know the manner in which drains were laid beneath house floors, they had vertical pipes which carried the effluent from the latrines and the overflow of rain water to a brick-laid drain. A water chute was cut in the outer walls of the houses, and a great conduit was laid along the street to carry away the sewage. The street drains have been laid bare, and we can note the solidity of their workmanship and the even gradient of their fall. Last, we know how capacious were the main sewers, or drains, and the manner in which their roofs were arched with corbeled bricks'"

Compare these conditions with those slovenly, malodorous, wooden shacks with half moons for windows, which in the memory of many of us graced our own back yards as recipients of the human excreta of the greatest nation known to civilization. Can it be that America was only recently less advanced than Mohenjo-daro? It can be, and there are even localities today where conditions remain as primitive, almost, as in the days of Mr. Cro-Magnon.

OUR TIMES

Coincident with this interest in the story of man of the past has come a closer scrutiny of ourselves in recent times and today. Studies of "The Roaring Forties," "The Mauve Decade," "The Age of Innocence" and scores of others have shown us as we were a little time back.

Mark Sullivan has held the mirror steadily before us and with skill and tact has revealed by quotation and illustration our recent crudities. The first two volumes "The Turn of the Century" and "America Finding Herself" is now succeeded by

Pre-War America, Scribner's, 1930, which prepares the way for his picture of America in war time Vividly parade across its pages Roosevelt, Harry K Thaw, E D Harriman, Maude Adams, Bellamy Storer and scores of others, their frailties revealed in kindly light Marvelous training this sandy-haired, rebellious minded newspaper man has had to be able to portray these slower, lesser minded men, who occupy so large a place in the public mind, with so much charity and appreciation

OUR DISCONTENT WITH CIVILIZATION

Post-war disillusionment and pessimism prevail Our great thinkers doubt the value of our civilization or even the survival of the race Our younger generation lacks faith and certitude Keyserling's "Decline of Western Civilization" is reflected in Norman Douglas' Goodbye to Western Culture, Harper's, 1930, a glorification of all that is eastern in derision of all that is western

Eliot Smith, English ethnologist, in his "Human History" reviewed in this Handbook last year, believes that by getting back to the Greeks and the primitives, we may yet save ourselves Keith, the anthropologist, in his presidential address at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, which was cabled around the world, in reviewing the history of man over millions of years said there is little hope for man if his civilization survives. The geologist, Mather, hopeful for the survival of the species, is uncertain as to whether white, yellow or black will carry on the torch.

Civilization and Its Discontents, by Sigmund Freud, Jonathan Cape & Harrison Smith, 1930, is the title under which the excellent translation of Joan Rivière has at last appeared The original edition in German was referred to briefly in this Handbook last year in "Our Misfit Civilization"

This is the ripest product of Freud's seminal mind. Broad and lucid, it is perhaps the most readable of any of his works At seventy-four, this pale, shrinking, modest man is perhaps with Einstein the farthest out on the fringe-like frontier of human thought Here is a psychanalyst's view of civilization, its cause But Freud has no cure

"It is very far from my intention to express any opinion concerning the value of human civilization . . . The fateful question of the human species seems to me to be whether and to what extent the cultural process developed in it will succeed in mastering the derangements of communal life caused by the human instinct of aggression and self-destruction. . . . In this connection, perhaps the phase through which we are at this moment passing deserves special interest."

Some individuals of the race have a feeling which Freud "would like to call a sensation of 'eternity,' a feeling as of something limitless, unbounded, something 'oceanic'." This he explains as a kind of subconscious race memory, the continuity of man's life through thousands of years,—a basic subconscious race memory, a sort of 'oceanic' tide which is perhaps basal to our mother and father feelings

The primary, infantile religious feelings of the ordinary man Freud summarises when he writes, "The ordinary man cannot imagine this Providence in any other form but that of a greatly exalted father, for only such a one could understand the needs of the sons of men, or be softened by their prayers and placated by the signs of their remorse." Our "whys" are the infantile appeals to a father "Life as we find it is too hard for us; it entails too much pain, too many disappointments, impossible tasks."

The psychanalyst finds the individual always seeking happiness, perhaps in some perverted form. This, of course, is only the positive reaction of organic life which turns from darkness and cold to warmth, light and heat. This is the biologist's tropism toward the atinic response to stimulus, this turning of an organism to light and warmth. But it is the psychanalyst's pleasure-principle Suffering comes from within, without, still more from our fellows. Freud summarises as did Job . . . Unable to achieve happiness we find compensation in drugs,—alcohol, opium, in art, visions, fancies, in work, sublimations. Of course Freud tells us that what we want today is to live the sexual life and destroy our fellows, that civilization imposes restraints upon us and that these restraints and repressions have made not only man neurotic, but his whole civilization.

This is putting it crudely, baldly, bluntly, Freud is much more persuasive and always he is stimulating. At times he is himself neurotic. Why not?

"At the time when Christianity conquered the pagan religions some such antagonism to culture must already have been actively at work."

"That the upbringing of young people at the present day conceals from them the part sexuality will play in their lives is not the only reproach we are obliged to bring against it. It offends too in not preparing them for the aggressions of which they are destined to become the objects. Sending the young out into life with such a false psychological orientation is as if one were to equip people going on a Polar expedition with summer clothing and maps of the Italian lakes. One can clearly see that ethical standards are being misused in a way. The strictness of these standards would not do much harm if education were to say.

'This is how men ought to be in order to be happy and make others happy, but you have to reckon with their not being so.' Instead of this the young are made to believe that every one else conforms to the standard of ethics, i.e., that everyone else is good. And then on this is based the demand that the young shall be so, too."

THE AMERICAN MENTALITY

For the conscience of our fathers we are developing a social conscience which may eventually be more helpful to the progress of our race. Dewey, Dorsey, Lippmann, Angell and Russell have helped us out of our pessimistic discontent and given us a sense of direction. H. A. Overstreet in his new book The Enduring Quest, Norton, 1930, endeavors to give us a popular philosophy to lead us out of the pessimism of this machine age.

Felix Frankfurter's The Public and Its Government, Yale University Press, 1931, examines into the defects and virtues of an American Democracy, the demands of modern society on government. Charles A. Beard and his son in The American Leviathan, Macmillan, 1930, take us on a tour of inspection of the modern ship of state and actually explain the functional activities of our government in all kinds of administration, research, big business and creative work on which we are so fully embarked.

The American Public Mind, Columbia University Press, 1930, by Peter Odegard, is a running commentary on the mentality of the American masses presented statistically in terms of measurement. The probability of any political action is measured by the author in dollars, pounds and inches. Here is a study of how the public mind is formed, what makes us "think" as we do. Sixty-five to eighty per cent of our voters vote the same party ticket as their fathers, the district leader in any one of 150,000 precincts has only to secure sixty-five votes in the primaries to control, the weight of a politician increases with the importance of his office. Whether the northeastern states go Republican or Democratic depends on whether there is more or less than forty-three inches of rainfall that season. With $2,000,000 Bruce Barton offers to "sell" the Kellogg Treaty to the American people.

Family life is confined to a few rooms. In 2,000,000 families the mother is at work outside the home every day. New responsibilities are thrust on the teaching profession which is overloaded with incompetents. Education is a gigantic public charity. School principals snoop into the private and personal affairs of a woman applicant so that she must confess to be a nincompoop or a hypocrite. With Norman Angell, the author doubts if education can really help men to think and apply their intelligence to social problems

BRAINS

One hesitates to revert to an old fashioned subject but the brain is actually of historical and archaeological interest. Anthropologists tell us of that surprising biological sport which appeared in western Europe about 25,000 years ago. Cro-Magnon man had a cranial capacity equal to or greater than our own. Embryologists tell us that the number of brain cells does not increase after birth. Physiologists and psychologists tell us that the greater portion of the brain cells in our cortex which we inherited from long ago, remains unused, inactive through life except in the rare individual who is usually regarded as a crank and a nuisance. But scientists still take an interest in this subject even if educators and statesmen do not.

Frederick Tilney in The Master of Destiny, Doubleday, Doran, 1930, has written "A Biography of the Brain." This is revised and rewritten from his earlier work, "The Brain from Ape to Man," which was reviewed in the 13th edition of this Handbook. In his study of the fossil brains of earlier man, he traces the progressive enlargement of the frontal lobes to the culmination in Cro-Magnon man, but he tells us that the human brain is still in its infancy, that the creation of a "better world" and the future progress of mankind depend chiefly upon the further evolution of a still better brain than the one we have now. The rank and file of mankind use but a small fraction of their potential brain power. If the schools could turn their attention from their traditional books to inducing and helping youth to use more of its brain power "there would be created a more intelligent world to live in, with fewer hatreds and fewer struggles."

The Human Mind, by Dr. Karl A. Menninger, Knopf, 1930, is a companion volume to Dr. Logan Clendenning's "The Human Body" and somewhat similar in treatment. It deals with mental hygiene and personality, mental maladjustments and motives. In the chapter "Motives" we study the sources and distribution of the power that motivates the human brain and determines the multitude of psychological, biological and physiological drives that man is heir to. That is, it deals with what we do, how we do it and why we do it and so may interest only a very few parents or educators.

Dr. Menninger says, "Let us define mental health as the adjustment of human beings to the world and to each other with a maximum of effectiveness and happiness. Not just efficiency, or just contentment—or the grace of obeying the rules of the game cheerfully. It is all of these together. It is the ability to maintain an even temper, an alert intelligence, socially considerate behavior, and a happy disposition." So it would seem to Dr. Menninger that if we all had healthy minds it would not matter whether or not we were educated. There would be no need for asylums, prisons or schools or any other institutions which have been devised to preserve society in this welter of unhealthy minds.

The monasteries of England preserved and fostered learning through centuries but eventually became a social burden. It is a great thing that today we may wander over the green lawns in the naves of their chapels and under the moldering arches of their refectories. Wells hopes we may so enjoy the architectural remains of our universities.

THE BIOLOGY OF HUMAN WELFARE

Twenty-eight of the foremost biological thinkers of the country, under the editorship of Edmund V. Cowdry, have contributed to Human Biology and Racial Welfare, Hoeser, 1930. Here is brought together the most vitally interesting material to illumine present day problems and the future of the race,—subjects that might be of as great importance to the coming generation as quaternions or Pali. Life in space and time, the origin of man, race, sex, marriage, environment and disease all seem to these men of interest. The origin of man is discussed from various angles by W. K. Gregory, R. M. Yerkes, W. M. Wheeler and others. Raymond Pearl deals with population problems, C. B. Davenport with the mingling of races, William Healey with antisocial behavior and John Dewey with the influence of education. Here we have the best biological thought on human potentialities.

DOES CULTURE MEAN PROGRESS?

Social progress has been the subject of many volumes by sociologists since Lester Ward and Todd. Now Wilson D. Wallis, Professor of the Departments of Anthropology and Sociology at the University of Minnesota, in Culture and Progress, McGraw Hill, 1930, attempts with historical perspective to view our civilization as a phase of human culture. The cultural developments of earlier groups such as the American Indian are interestingly presented. This machine culture of ours does not overenthuse him. "While we have created larger and more beautiful roses" we have also created more deadly poisonous gases. Our path may have been one of glory. It may yet lead to the grave. "The goal, if there is one, seems to be somewhere the other side of nowhere."

ARE WE OFF THE ROAD?

A million teachers are teaching so conscientiously, plugging ahead so earnestly, that they must rely on their leaders, if there are any, to keep them on the right road. Dr. George S. Counts, in The American Road to Culture, John Day, 1930 turning aside for the moment from his problems of pedagogy has paused to consider,—are we going in the right direction?

Our education he finds is competitive like our business world. Competition for marks or cups or dollars leads to academic or athletic or social honors. Only in a few modern schools is there a turning to the non-competitive in physical as well as in mental training. Naively utilitarian motivations control our faulty and provincial "culture." Our blind faith in education and democratic fetishes has led us into pathless swamps. There is bitter poverty in our national idealism. Our noisy and unthinking boosters and our hundred percenters need this warning that they are off the road. The "favored groups" in which "real governmental responsibility" is "highly concentrated" need the evidence of the high "overhead" that is being expended to prevent inevitable change.

Clearly, courageously Dr. Counts sketches in the social background of our educational system. He makes us seriously question, "Is the school making our children conform to an order, namely, the present, that cannot serve the interests of those children?" He asks us to give new vitality to our ideals of patriotism and citizenship.

HUMAN FATE, HEREDITY, AND ENVIRONMENT

Genetics is a new science. Its terms are not found in the dictionaries of fifteen years ago and yet its terminology like that of psychoanalysis is essential to all educated readers. There is no way in which problems of heredity and environment may be discussed intelligently without a certain minimum use of such terms as genes, chromosomes, Mendelian heredity and sex-linked inheritance.

In the first five chapters of The Biological Basis of Human Nature, Norton, 1930, Dr. H. S. Jennings has attempted to make familiar this terminology and what lies behind it. For out of this breeding of flies, mice and guinea pigs has come a body of knowledge which has bearings on human affairs. This is discussed in chapter eight and prepares us for the discourse "On the relations of heredity and environment to the characteristics and fate of human beings." Heredity, Jennings believes has been overemphasized at the expense of environment as a determining factor in human development. His treatment of the subject is human and at times there is humor in his disclosure of the frailties and fallacies of human scientists. Behaviorists and eugenists are set in the niches assigned them. Jennings realizes that any improvement in humanity will be a slow process.

NEW LIGHT ON EVOLUTION

The humanizing of knowledge goes on apace. It was only a quaint phrase for an almost unknown process when James Harvey Robinson pleaded for it a few years ago in his powerful little book, a paper reviewed in this Handbook. It is even fashionable now for erstwhile most seclusive specialists to write books for the populace. Austin H. Clark, who has given most of his life to crinoids, has produced a readable book of nature lore and scientific fact. His scientific publishers, Williams and Wilkins, 1930, under a jazzed up title, The New Evolution, Zoogenesis, in a cryptic but blatant blurb announce the author's new concept as of far-reaching importance.

One searches in vain for this new concept through chapters filled with interesting facts and phenomena and finally comes to this: "All the major groups of animals were formed at the same time as the result of following different developmental paths from the primitive single cell." How the primitive single cell was formed does not come within the range of this volume. The main thesis is that phyla, once established as a result of mutation, are practically unchanging, subject to only lesser mutations, that there is no missing link between the ape and man but that each originated as a major mutation from a primitive ancestral line and each has since pursued its path of differentiation through a long time.

Home life among the insects, the rodents, and other groups described, leads the author to the final conclusion that "we learn from the study of animal forms in the broadest sense that it is the home and associated features that form the foundation of the human social structure, in the home originated, and from the home emanated, all our social progress." Now girls will you stay at home!

WHY WE BEHAVE AND HOW

Dr. John B. Watson, potent member of a great advertising agency and once a Johns Hopkins scientific researcher, is periodically buried by his critics and enemies and then breaks loose from the agency and slays the Philistines as of old. Behaviorism, a Battle Line, Cokesbury, 1930, edited by William P. King, lines up the hosts of his critics and enemies nineteen strong, who attack from every side, some with hideous grimaces. Foreworded by William P. King, D.D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, introduced by Josiah Morse, Ph D, University of South Carolina, they are headed by redoubtable William McDougall of Duke University, Durham After the smoke of battle clears we find Dr John B handling the public a new and revised edition of his great work. Stripped of all personal idiosyncrasies and curlicues, we find at the core the simple proposition, "All complex behavior is a growth or development out of simple responses"

During the middle ages collections of "exempla" were made the basis for sermons We have something of this method applied to the presentation of that side of behaviorism of homo sapiens which we call human nature Charles Duff's book This Human Nature, Cosmopolitan Book, 1930, is easy reading, and the titles of the sections are sufficiently intriguing Mr Duff's purpose, well achieved, is to puncture current superstitions and conceits and further to provide a lively, conclusive and unorthodox answer to that ancient bromide "You can't change human nature" This he does by portraying instances of human behavior over a period of thousands of years

WHAT IS CHARACTER?

The chief obsession of many school masters, one gathers from their school catalogs, is "character building" Their own ideal environment particularly conduces to it, and they go about it purposefully and directly. But these gentlemen would derive little comfort, though possibly some enlightenment, from Studies in the Organization of Character, Macmillan, 1930, by Hugh Hartshorne, Mark May and Frank Shuttleworth, the third and final volume in the "Character Education Inquiry." The earlier volumes on "Deceit" and "Service and Self-Control," have been reviewed in the last two editions of this Handbook.

Again we have here presented in tabulation and terse statement the results of tests and measurements of intricate character tendencies of boys and girls. In this volume as in the preceding the method whereby children are studied is fully explained. The work of others in the same and related fields is reviewed Then follow descriptions of tests used,—as to knowledge and opinion, as to social attitudes, as to the value and sources of moral knowledge, concomitance of environment and moral knowledge. This brings us to the exploration of inner relations, —conduct and the relation of knowledge to it, how do group standards affect group conduct, how does foresight affect character; what evidence can be gathered from reputation, from character portraits, from social functioning On the basis of these quantitative and statistical studies and investigations in these fields and into these problems, material is acquired for study through graphs of the degree of honesty, "Integration of Honesty."

From such quantitative, objective, impersonal and unprejudiced scientific studies of elements of behavior that contribute to character, investigators arrive at some important and vital conclusions which stand out strongly in contrast to the precepts of the traditional moralists. As a single example of such a conclusion, let us quote briefly their first conclusion on the subject of honesty and deception.

"It seems to be a fair conclusion from our data that honest and deceptive tendencies represent not general traits nor action guided by general ideals, but specific habits learned in relation to specific situations which have made the one or the other mode of response successful. For deceptive children, success has come to be defined in such a way as to encourage and permit dishonest methods for attaining it. As an illustration of how such concepts may arise, one has only to think of much parental discipline, with its emphasis on outer conformity, and of much school practice, with its emphasis on marks more than on inner growth.

"Again, deception does not decrease with age or grade. The school teaching regarding dishonesty and school methods of suppressing certain of its manifestations do not materially affect its appearance when opportunity is offered for practicing it, even when the gains to be won are relatively slight. If suggested to pupils that marks on a test will count on their monthly grade, the amount of deception at once increases."

The first conclusion of the whole study is "prevailing ways of teaching ideals and standards probably do little good and may do harm."

MORES AND MORALS

What a life! To live the lives of others so different from one's own, to get into brown skins and look out through their eye holes, to interpret them in a way to interest and help our own kind. This has been the life of Dr. Margaret Mead as she is still known professionally though now she is married and takes her husband with her as assistant.

Trained anthropologist, pupil of Boaz, Assistant Curator of Ethnology of the American Museum of Natural History, Doctor of Philosophy, she has just reported on her last venture. For some six months she lived as did the people of the Manus tribe in the village of Peri on one of the Admiralty islands north of New Guinea. She learned their language, thought their thoughts, ate their food, observed their tabus, lived their life. She tells about it in her Growing up in New Guinea, Morrow, 1930.

Two years ago in this Handbook we reported on her earlier adventure "Coming of Age in Samoa," which she wrote after living for some length of time in a remote Samoan village. That story was chiefly on the adolescent girl. This deals with both sexes. Adventure, new fields to conquer, a scientific attitude, exploration, mastery of one's subject, interpretation of the unknown,—the gods have vouchsafed to Margaret Mead. What a life!

It is the educational implications that are of interest to Dr. Mead. Among the Manus she finds sociological implications. They are the Yankees of Melanesia, obsessed by an interest in property—pigs, beads, dogs' teeth. The education of the child is completely neglected. The Manus children are spoiled, untrained, and remind Miss Mead of American children. The transition from the child to the acquisitive adult, possessively married, again reminds her of the people she left at home.

The pathologist has made possible modern medicine today; the anthropologist has opened to the alert-minded a vision of future education. The comparative view is sanifying. It gives a sense of direction and proportion. Clifford E. Barbour, "Ph.D. (Edin)" approaches the whole subject of customs and morals from another point of view and after examining all the dangerous doctrines of the time leads us back to the old sources of salvation.

Sin and the New Psychology, Abington Press, 1930, is written by a dyed-in-the-wool Presbyterian minister. The color remains fast after being exposed to all the modernisms of the psychanalyst and the psychiatrist. He finds that after all what they are studying is really the old original sin which began with Adam and Eve because of the apple.

Dr. Barbour reveals a knowledge and an awareness, even more comprehensive than the pope in his encyclical, of all the modern errors that have developed within the walls of universities and within the crania of psychologists and psychoanalysts. He knows just what they put down in books and what they talk about in their clinics. He is a learned man and knows all the phrases. After taking his reader all about the fringes of the subject, he peers in upon Freud, Jung, Adler and McDougall. After all that, according to the publisher's note on the jacket, he then brings us to Jesus.

PERSONALITY AND ACHIEVEMENT

The Enlargement of Personality, Scribner's, 1930, is by Dr. J. H. Denison, formerly a clergyman, widely traveled and read. It supplements his "Emotion as the Basis of Civilization" which was reviewed in this Handbook two years ago. This new book deals primarily with the psychology and practical ethics of the individual. It is a study of behavior patterns and their formation. Dr. Denison believes that "human nature has been changed repeatedly in the most astounding ways in a few generations by the steadfast application of emotional culture."

In The Psychology of Achievement, Simon and Schuster, 1930, Walter B. Pitkin has written a remarkable book, very uneven in its readability. Parts of it are the exploitation of his pet notions. He probably had lots of fun making his charts. It begins with a story of "The Prince and the Pauper," illuminatingly preparing the way for a discriminating contrast of success and achievement. His analysis in the form of case histories of real and fictitious persons makes his book of value. Irving Berlin and Bismarck, Chaplin and Cromwell, Lenin and Lindbergh, Michelangelo and Mussolini, Babe Ruth and Roosevelt among scores of others are psychologically revealed.

So many of our most successful men have achieved nothing that the contrast cannot be made too striking. So many who have achieved greatly have met with no success, that we should praise those who celebrate their achievements. So let us now praise Pitkin, especially as his book has fallen into the hands of jealous reviewers who have published similarly popularized psychologies for the success market. Where will we find a seminal and stimulating treatment of the subject for popular consumption? Interest, emotions, finally intellect are treated, as elements contributing both to success and achievement.

GENIUS

Fifteen years ago Lewis Terman at Stanford University set aside a portion of his salary and time each year to collect data on bright children, hoping to gather some real knowledge as to the nature of their intelligence and genius. The first report published in 1925 and reviewed in the 10th edition of the Handbook was a study of one thousand gifted children selected as the brightest four or five out of each thousand examined. In volume two, reviewed in the 11th edition, an interim study covered factual research into the early lives and training of one thousand historical geniuses who lived between the fifteenth and the nineteenth centuries.

Now the third volume in "Genetic Studies of Genius," made possible by further financing which enable three assistants to make studies in field and office over a period of two years. The Promise of Youth, Stanford University Press, 1930, by Barbara Burks, Dortha Jensen, Lewis M. Terman, reports on follow up study. Again we visit and study these same gifted children and find on re-measuring that their I.Q.'s, originally 130 to 180, for the most part remain constant. There are slight variations, a few cases of deterioration, one or two of delirquency, but in general high standards of achievement and accomplishment have been maintained

Many antiquated superstitions regarding bright children have been completely disproved "It is not true that such children are especially prone to be puny, emotionally unstable, socially unadaptable, morally undependable" One section of the book is devoted to a presentation of examples of juvenile writings with a scale for rating them to which is added a chapter "The Prediction of Literary Achievement"

In conclusion the editor explains that researches, the beginnings of which are presented in these three volumes, have involved the expenditure of $60,000 and the devotion of a staff of assistants It would be interesting to see the results of a challenge to any educational foundation to present a better return on $60,000 investigation Still more interesting will be the follow up in 1940 and 1960 of the lives of these children whose mentalities we know so accurately and at so early an age Such studies as this lead us to ponder on how little we know and how much there is to learn about the youth of our species, how they react, what makes them as they are, how they learn to use their mentalities, and what part school and schoolmasters play in the whole, for good and for harm

THE EDUCATED MAN

What are the stigmata that mark the educated man? William James defined an educated man as one "able to tell a good man when he sees one" John Dewey tells us that "a good man is one that is getting better and a bad man is one that is getting worse" But Albert Edward Wiggam in The Marks of an Educated Man, Bobbs Merrill, 1930, has another answer: "The more ignorant a man is, the more positive he is in his opinions" Wiggam adopts Everett Martin's definition as to what is education, "the development of those mental habits that enable a man to meet adequately concrete situations" This is not far from James, for distinguishing the good man from the bad is certainly a concrete situation. And John Dewey follows right in the same steps

This is a book of etiquette for the would-be educated but the standards are set impossibly high. The "A" of Wiggam's "A B C" of education is the "open mind," the ability to judge uncolored by "politics, business, religion, morals and life." Most of the chapters are made from magazine articles which in turn were made over from lecture platform utterances.

WHY SCHOOLS?

Dr. Charles C. Peters' Foundations of Educational Sociology, Macmillan, 1930, is a revised and rewritten edition of the book originally published and reviewed in this Handbook six years ago. We note on the reverse of the title page that it has been reprinted six times. Dr. Peters is Professor of Education and Director of Educational Research in Pennsylvania State College. He has been teacher, principal, and student of sociology under Yocum and Snedden. He is curious about what sociologists and educators believe and maintain but refuses to accept their doctrines without test and scrutiny.

This revision is thorough and well done, involving some radical changes, the addition of much new material, bringing the book up to date. There have been added summaries of many quantitatively controlled researches. The revised edition moves forward even more boldly and intelligently than did the first edition.

Dr. Peters in his first sentence apologizes for the pretentious title of the book, suggesting that it would be more accurate to call it "The Beginnings." The title might more simply be, "Why Boys and Girls Go to School," or "Why Schools." The opening chapter, "Our Problem," realistically describes the author's happening upon a cabinet maker's shop. Each busy workman was supplied with the best of tools. His workmanship was of the highest grade. But no one was able to explain or to reveal what he was doing. The pieces in the making were of very solid material, firmly glued and nailed together, but in the final processes they took no useful or recognizable form. After similar experiences in a great tailoring establishment, the author awakes to find that it was all a bad dream.

Then he goes into a school room and describes the conduct of a class in Latin. He listens to the translation of good Latin into barbarous English, the teacher courteously explaining that she is teaching Caesar so that, next year, her pupils could translate Cicero. Cicero would prepare them for Vergil, Vergil for college Latin. And the latter would prepare them to teach Latin to still other generations. "Latin," the teacher pointed out, "has been worked over for so long that it is the best taught of all the school subjects. It is the one subject that enables the student to square himself with present day problems." The dreaming author felt terribly ill. Again he worked his toes and clenched his fists and pinched himself. But he could not wake up.

"Some Things to Think About," the following section, challenges some of the most sacred fundamentals of our schools. Swiftly we cast our eyes over the plan of life of the individual in the evolution of organic life. With this background, education means more than schooling. The author recognizes the importance of play, the outdoors, the home, the church, the social influences, and each is given a chapter. The book as a whole is readable, stimulating, challenging.

WHO ARE THE REAL EDUCATORS?

The real educators of the world are not those who parrot old stuff to children but those who humanize knowledge and those who interpret first hand learnings to those of us most avid for new knowledge,—who hand them down to those who give them out. Each year sees books of such real educational value that are not generally classed as “educational books.”

What is of more primary and primitive importance to us than our food habits? Dr. David Fairchild in his Exploring For Plants, Macmillan, 1930, has told in fascinatingly readable form of his travels in search of new foods for Americans and of his studies of the habits and prejudices of peoples in all parts of the world. Nothing could be more senseless than these existing food tabu and in nothing is re-education more difficult. The Frenchman has not yet learned to use maize or what we call corn, which he regards as chicken feed, and we Americans have only recently begun to use fungi for food. While the golden thread of this narrative is the food habits of the world, it is a delightfully readable book interspersed with significant anecdotes and bits of educational philosophy.

William Morton Wheeler is another real educator who is constantly throwing light on human social problems through his first hand knowledge of social life among the insects which led him to his study of “The Foibles of Insects and Men.” He and Fairchild mention their recent travels together in their two most recent books. Wheeler’s is rather sensationally titled Demons of the Dust, Norton, 1931. He takes the reader around the world and through the centuries on the trail of two ferocious and predatory insects—the ant-lion and the worm-lion, whose remarkable behavior he has been studying in Australia, Sumatra, and Central and South America.

Living Africa, McGraw Hill, 1930, by Bailey Willis, is a study of a geologist’s 1500 mile investigation of the Rift valleys of Eastern Africa. He examines some 1500 miles of Rifts in journeys covering 6000 miles in a period of six months. Much of this was by foot safari even in the relatively unknown Livingstone mountains north of Nyasa, over successive mountain ranges, day after day, month after month. At this time he was seventy-three years of age but ever since boyhood it had been his dream to explore Africa. Meantime since 1881 he had been investigating geological problems, all over the world, at the backdoor of China, in South America. Modestly written in the form of letters he reads not merely the landscape and the rocks but the crystals. The great forces that have made these enormous valleys, he believes, will go on today as they have in the past, and are chiefly atomic and molecular, the forces of crystallization

Another Africa View, Harper, 1931, of the same territory, is by Juhan Huxley, scientist and one of the trinity of "Science of Life" sent in 1929 by the Colonial Office to make a study of native education in eastern Africa. He gives us an interesting series of pictures but very different, of the same country over which Willis traveled

THE HUMAN INFANT

The scientific observation of infancy is something quite recent, as the infant becomes a matter of interest to scientists. The human infant, formerly regarded as of wholly sentimental interest, is now a subject of growing interest for accurate observation and scientific investigation. Gradually we are learning something of the infant's world, how he reacts and grows, how he learns. The First Year of Life, John Day, 1930, by Charlotte Buhler, a translation from German, is a study of the normal behavior of the human animal. Twenty-five children in a Viennese school were tested and retested at intervals. Early diagnosis of intellectual ability is claimed. The author's work shows a knowledge of the earlier observations of Preyer and the more recent studies of Gesell at Yale. The work and conclusions of Dr. Buhler presented in a popular manner are adequately illustrated by graphs and tables. It is an interesting and instructive book to put in the hands of parents of young children.

Jean Piaget in two works, The Child's Conception of the World, 1929 and The Child's Conception of Physical Causality, 1930, both Harcourt Brace, approaches child study in quite a different way. Piaget had the assistance of twenty-five collaborators associated with him at the Institut Rousseau.

THE CHILD AND HIS PARENTS

Parents are becoming increasingly conscious of their children and their duties to them. The great number of books published on the problems and interrelations of parents and children make this evident. Dr. Alfred Adler has found this an interesting field for lectures at parents' associations and women's clubs. His Education of Children and Guiding the Child, both Greenberg, 1930, contain much helpful common sense thus stimulated with, of course, the expected psychologic and psychoanalytic backgrounds. The Guidance of Mental Growth in Infant and Child, Macmillan, 1930, by Arnold Gesell, is based on his earlier studies of infancy and deals with the changing status of the pre-war child. He gives a historical throwback with reproductions of old nineteenth century prints of childhood and then carries on to the present day and the future.

Child Care and Training, University of Minnesota Press, 1930, is by Marion L. Faegre and John E. Anderson, both professionally connected with child welfare at the University of Minnesota. It is a sound practicable book, now in the third edition, for those professionally bent toward the subject.

The Young Child and His Parents, University of Minnesota Press, 1930, is by Josephine C. Foster and John E. Anderson. The former is principal of a nursery school and the latter is a director of the Institute of Child Welfare at the University of Minnesota. This is the illuminating study of one hundred case histories, all interestingly and scientifically told.

Children at the Cross Roads, Commonwealth Fund, 1930, is a collection of nine case histories told in an interestingly human way by Agnes E. Benedict. Reading these stories we see the world through the eyes of these boys and girls who are isolated in lonely rural districts, we understand why Raymond was in rebellion, why Fanny was bored, why Tom was a truant. We see the visiting teacher, working alone without equipment, usually in the face of opposition in the community, meeting these problems and solving them so long as her time and energy permit.

The Healthy Minded Child, Coward-McCann, 1930, is by Nelson A. Crawford and Karl A. Menninger. Here a magazine editor and a medical scientist have combined to produce a sound book of first importance. Common sense has not kept the child healthy minded. We need the aid of science, the authors tell us. Child Adjustment, Appleton, 1930, is by Annie D. Inskeep. A child psychologist and a Ph.D., with experiences in California public schools, the problems of schools and their relation to growth and development are sanely treated.

Innumerable are the publishers' guides for parents. Home Guidance for Young Children, John Day, 1930, by Grace Langdon covers from prenatal time to the sixth year. The Child from One to Six, McGraw-Hill, 1930, by Ada H. Harlitt, another attempt to be practical, has little to recommend it. The Child From Five to Ten, Dutton, 1930, by Evelyn and Miriam Kenwick adds nothing new and is sentimental but liberal and contains an index and a bibliography.

Bringing Up Your Child, Duffield & Co., 1931, by Edwin A. Cowan and Avis D. Carlson, attempts to be practical and is commonplace. The Management of Young Children, Morrow, 1930, by William E. Blatz and Helen Bott, deals with social relations and personality. Ruth Strang's An Introduction to Child Study, Macmillan, 1930, is for parents and their clubs and associations. Intellectual Growth in Young Children, Harcourt Brace, 1930, by Susan Isaacs, is a study of a teacher in an elementary school in England.

The Child's Emotions, University of Chicago Press, 1930, is a report of proceedings and round table discussions by Gruenberg, Bronner and Myerson on character development in the middle west in 1930.

The Modern Parent, Greenberg, 1930, by Dr Garry C Myers, exposes the ordinary sins of parents who treat children with disrespect but fail to spank them when needed V F Calverton and Samuel D Schmalhausen supply another title, The New Generation, Macaulay Co, 1930, dealing with the intimate problems of modern parents and children

Farm Children, Appleton, 1931, by Bird T Baldwin, Eva A Fillmore and Lora Hadley, is an interesting first hand study, families now average 3.5 instead of six children as in the 1900 household Their physical, mental and social environment is here studied, analyzed and presented

Human Children, Viking Press, 1930, by Paul Eipper the author of "Animals Looking at You" presents unusual pictures of great charm of children black, yellow and brown

ADOLESCENTS

Adolescents, the raw material of the secondary school, the hope of the race in the future,—adolescents are coming in for better understanding. The adolescent girl today and her attitudes are described by Phyllis Blanchard and Carlyn Manassas in New Girls for Old, Macaulay, 1930. Ten years ago, Miss Blanchard's "The Adolescent Girl" was one of the first on the subject This new book brings the girl's development along a decade. Her job is no longer so interesting. The girl looks ahead Marriage and the career-marriage interest the 1930 girl. She displays tolerance rather than a radical attitude toward sex. The flame of youth seems to be less hectic in its burning. The book is a symposium of the thoughts of 252 modern girls on family, recreation, education, careers, and sex.

In Adolescence: Studies in Mental Hygiene, Farrar & Rinehart, 1930, Dr Frankwood E Williams gathers together in book form the material of many lectures. He questions whether anyone has truly grown up, intellectually, physically, and emotionally How deeply rooted and subtle are our infantile traits? Two measures he gives of emotional maturity emancipation from home and the establishment of heterosexuality.

To the school as a laboratory comes W. Ryland Boorman in Personality in Its Teens, Macmillan, 1930 This study of some 300 boys at school gives case histories of their reactions to questions and situations set them by the investigator. The Pattern of Life by Alfred Adler, Cosmopolitan Book, 1930, is a stenographic report of the clinical treatment of twelve mal-adjusted children at the New School for Social Research in

New York. Edited by W. Beran Wolfe, M.D., it presents evidence to show that practically all maladjustments are the results of family complications. The over docile, the rebel, the feeble minded, and the neurotic are among the types described.

The Boy Today, Fleming Revell, 1930, gives Mather Abbott's picture of the adolescent as he sees him amid the swirling currents and transformations of this post-war world. He presents the modern boy as known by the head master of a great boys' school—a man who for thirty-four years has been in close touch with youth. He hews close to the line in his discussion of the boy's problems and conduct, and his book is replete with interesting, amusing, appropriate illustrations taken from incidents in his own life as a head master.

What are the problems of the boy today in a godless world, in a selfish world, in a sensual world, in a bootlegging world, in an automobile world? How does the boy today stand up in such an environment? For answer, he presents stimulating ideas and incidents from his own rich experience. This is typical: "When I went to boarding school my parents were almost afraid to send me for what I might learn there, here are schoolmasters afraid to let their boys go home for the holidays for fear of what they may learn there. . . How do we keep them straight in our schools? Well, here is one answer. Boyhood is supremely idealistic."

He knows his mothers. "I once asked a great educator," he says, "as to the age at which I should take boys into school. His ready response was, 'At the age of twelve, for that is the time when the modern boy begins to obtain the ascendancy over his mother!'"

Of the youth to whom he is devoting his life he says: "Never in my years of teaching have I seen such a love of truth and hatred of sham as I have found in modern youth. To deceive a schoolmaster by hook or by crook in my boarding school days was thought no sin. These youngsters today, with their hatred of a lie, will nearly always tell you the truth, even though it involves their own expulsion. So firm are we in this knowledge that we can trust their word of honour as absolute truth."

A readable book, this, written in a rapidly flowing, emotional style of question and exclamation. It has an appeal far beyond the close circle of private school educators.

How different was the problem of the adolescent in 1853. A School Boy's Letters of Seventy-seven Years Ago, Richard G. Badger, 1930, were, according to the title page, "Written from Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., in 1852 and 1853 by Henry Martin Saville, M.D. Edited with a Foreword and Sketch of his Life by his Sole Surviving Son and Namesake, the Reverend Henry Martyn Saville of Providence, Rhode Island." This eighteen-year-old boy writes homely letters telling of work and play and recreation at Andover. He is surprisingly mature and serious. He tells of much church, much prayer meeting, of the enforcement of rules and regulations, and of the penalties for infringement of them. Though the curriculum was barren and the masters narrow and sterile, there were other cultural advantages, for Andover at that time was a center to which distinguished political and literary men came for lectures and visits.

THE ENGLISH TRADITION

English Education, Cambridge University Press, 1930, is a weighty volume of five hundred large pages by John William Adamson, Fellow of King's College, London, and Emeritus Professor of Education at the University of London. At the beginning of the period 1789-1902 with which it deals, Dr Adamson tells us there was no educational system in England. There were religious foundations of monastic origin. By the end of the period, "a national system had at length been organized" and control had passed from church to state. The long and tortuous course by which this was accomplished is painstakingly followed in all its phases.

The English Public School, Longmans, Green, 1930, by Bernard Darwin, is one of the series of small books published under the general title "The English Heritage." Stanley Baldwin, himself a public school boy, writes the introduction to the series in which, breathing the love for England we all feel, he dilates on such subjects as "The County Spirit," "The Parish Church," "The English Road" and "The English Heritage." Mr Darwin, who writes this meaty little volume, is not only a public school boy, but has given his life as a teacher in the public schools. He writes with the longing he might have for an old loved mistress, who had sapped his life and strength and left him puzzled and bewildered but still unconscious of her devitalizing influence. He knows that she has done him damage as well as good but he cannot evaluate her. He regrets that schoolmasters "underrate the mystery of their trade."

With such equipment as he has and full knowledge of all that has been written, Mr Darwin attempts to interpret "The Public School Spirit" though doubtful as to what this may be. In tracing historical development he dwells with relish on the absurdities, the crudities and the cruelties of the public school life of the past, but remains loyal to these haloed and hallowed customs. Customs are everything. "What are truisms at Rugby are paradoxes at Harrow, and an Eton custom would prove a Malborough revelation."

He still admires the English public school boy who leaves school "disgracefully ignorant of the rudiments of useful knowledge, who can speak no language but his own and writes that imperfectly, to whom the noble literature of his country and the stirring history of his forefathers are almost a sealed book, and who has devoted a great part of his time and nearly all his thought to athletic sports, yet brings away with him something. If the public school boy has, as no doubt he often has, an uncultivated mind and a lack of general interests, that is in some degree because his father never reads a book."

A critical appraisal of what Eton and other public schools have done for the British Empire is brought out in two recent books by pillars and administrators of British rule.

Must England Lose India, Knopf, 1930, is by Lt Col Arthur Osburn, D S O, a former public school boy and master, and long in the Indian civil and military service. The theme of the book is that the disaster of British rule in India is due to the superiority complex of British officials, which he traces very directly to the influence of the public schools of England, like Eton and Harrow, in which these civil servants have been trained. He shows that the boys in these schools are brutalized by the hardening system of prefects, fags, and flogging, that a "get-even" complex is established. It takes real courage to oppose the attitudes of his own caste and to point out the harm that the sacred Public Schools have done to the British Empire.

Adventure, Stokes, 1930, by Maj Gen J. E. B. Seely, is the life story of a British soldier, statesman and sportsman who served in the Boer War, House of Commons and who as Secretary of State had more to do with organizing England for the Great War than any other one man. It's a marvelous tale he tells of how for an hour the British Constitution was suspended while millions were provided for the Intelligence Service that brought England and her allies into the War. But Seely, like Osburn, is strong in denouncing the famed "hardening" system of producing English gentlemen. He sees it as a subtle source of weakness rather than as the key to British imperial success as it is ordinarily held to be. England and her colonies are strewn with psychopathic wrecks in high places who were created in the English public schools by flogging methods.

OUR UNIVERSITIES

E. E. Slosson and J. J. Chapman, Thoreau and Emerson, as well as a host of minor critics have all been critical of our universities. Abraham Flexner's Universities, American, English, and German, Oxford University Press, 1930, has proved the sensation of the academic year in university circles.

Flexner, a shrewd, wiry, idealistic Kentucky Jew of the same breed as Brandeis, went through the white heat of the enthusiasm of the early Johns Hopkins in the eighties, taught for many years in a public high school, later built his own private school in Louisville. For twenty years secretary of the General Education Board, he is now organizing a new Johns Hopkins under the $5,000,000 Bamberger trust. His essay, "A Modern School," it will be remembered, led to the foundation of the Lincoln School, endowed and supported by Rockefeller money.

Flexner's book is constructive, though the first notices emphasized the critical. He holds that "the university must throw its weight and prestige on the side of intelligence!" Genuine research, not the sham that is practiced by so many Ph D's, with courage to deal with living things, even "coal strikes, Indian unrest, rubber, oil, and American lynching," is the proper activity of universities. "The modern university must neither fear the world nor make itself responsible for its conduct."

The university should "shelter and develop thinkers, experimenters, inventors, teachers, and students, who, without responsibility for action, will explore the phenomena of social life and endeavour to understand them."

The Liberal College in Changing Society, Century, 1930, is an excellent foil to the foregoing. Written by J. B. Johnston, dean at the University of Minnesota, there is stuff here to thrill the sophomore alumni in the worship of their Alma Mater at Commencement time. He writes, "the first concern of the college is to find persons of superior intelligence and to discover all the kinds of ability and interest which these persons possess." Such a college should be marked by a pillar of cloud by day and fire by night.

Higher Education Faces the Future, edited by Paul A. Schilpp, Liveright, 1930, has twenty chapters written by college people on the future development of our present day universities and colleges. Three Europeans, an Englishman, a Frenchman, and a German, look at us from the background of their national traditions. Eight American university men as distinctive as Bagley, Hopkins, Vincent, and Dewey deal with general and specific problems in the American institutions of learning, while five university executives as varied as Meiklejohn, Holt, and Lowell tell about their own pet schemes.

Higher Education in America, edited by Raymond A. Kent, Ginn, 1930, brings together twenty-four professional collegians who, dissatisfied with the former smugness of college teaching, invite the spotlight of ruthless scrutiny.

Clarence C. Little in The Awakening College, Norton, 1930, gives the backgrounds for the differences of opinion between himself and the Michigan Babbitts who trusteeed his university and led to his separation from it.

A picture of the American university in process of transformation is presented in Henry James' new life of Charles W. Eliot, Houghton Mifflin, 1930. It brings out the human qualities of the man, his strength as well as his blind spots, and reveals much of his friendly family side that is too little known. Nevertheless one can't but feel that there is an attitude of sophistication in the writing. There is no valiant exposition or support of the policies for which Eliot's life stands. Sails are trimmed to present-day winds. The opportunity to write a great life of Eliot and what he stood for as opposed to what is now going on still remains open.

Life in College by Christian Gauss, Dean of Princeton, Scribner, 1930, gives an amiable, friendly picture of life at Princeton and the problems that students and parents create. "You will finish the book," writes William McAndres, "persuaded that colleges are doing very well, thank you. Just so was the South in 1860, the Louisiana lottery in 1870, Spain in Cuba in 1880, and Chicago, always, according to the larger number of comforting folks we have always with us, God bless 'em."

NEW TRICKS FOR OLD DOGS

No one man has done more in scientific investigation, in educational and genetic psychology than Dr. Edward L. Thorndike of Columbia. His studies and the studies he has sponsored and directed constitute the largest body of definite scientific measured knowledge on the processes of learning and intelligence, both of man and animals, of all the data that lie at the basis of our educational practices. In "Adult Learning" reviewed in the 13th edition of this Handbook he shows that adults from twenty-five to forty-five learn quite as quickly as high school students and expresses the opinion that to lengthen the early school years is unwise, that it is better to let children go to work in their middle teens and then make up for the deficiencies in their education later on. He also says that adult learning has many advantages and that it is the complacency, laziness and evasiveness of adults that has given rise to the tradition that all learning must be accomplished during adolescence, however laboriously and painfully.

In Human Learning, Century, 1931, he discusses the nature and evolution of the subject, restating what has previously been known and giving the result of experiences carried on during the past three years. It may be disconcerting and unduly stimulating to learn that ability to learn a language improves with age,—but any new knowledge that runs counter to accepted tradition usually is disturbing.

Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher in Learn or Perish, Liveright,

1930, an address based on her earlier book, "Why Stop Learning?" goes further, perhaps less scientifically. She exhorts us to become intellectual and continue to learn if we are not to become flabby and flatulent. Born in Kansas, reared in the academic atmosphere of fresh water colleges, educated in France, she is equipped to occupy a professorial teaching position. But from her present vantage point among the Vermont hills, she prefers to go on learning and to teach a wider audience, chiefly through the medium of fiction. There are millions of worthy citizens who may still be redeemed by unsettling their mature minds with an occasional new idea. At least, so Mrs. Fisher naively believes. "We learned that in school" or "I was never taught that in college" should be an obsolete attitude. Mrs. Fisher thinks that we should continue to live and learn. It is unenlightened to crowd into the heads of adolescents all that they may need for the following sixty years and then to hermetically seal their minds.

THE PRIVATE SCHOOLS

STATISTICALLY AND CRITICALLY DESCRIBED

EXPLANATORY NOTE

In bold face type the basic statistical facts are given for each school as reported by the school. The school name, for Boys, or Girls or coeducational (Coed), the Ages of the pupils enrolled, the date of establishment (Est), the head with degrees, colleges, and title. The enrollment (Enr) is whenever possible divided into boarding (Bdg) and day. The number of the faculty (Fac) in general includes only full-time instructors. Tuition (Tui) with its various ranges, boarding and day, the grades covered and the courses given, college preparatory (Col Prep), academic (Acad), and special (Music, Art, Domestic Science, etc), are indicated. The type of ownership, — incorporated, incorporated not for profit, partnership, proprietary; the number of the trustees and how elected; the endowment, scholarships and their value; prizes and their value, denominational influence or affiliation, the colleges and associations to which the school is accredited, the associations of which the school is a member, or by which approved; the number of pupils taking College Entrance Board Examinations (C E B Exams) for various years, the number of graduates entering college in 1930, and the number of living alumni are given where known.

Endowment has frequently been omitted where no income from it was reported, in the belief that the value of plant had been reported as endowment. Accrediting by the state department of education and by church boards has been omitted, in the belief that such accrediting is inconsequential in a national way.

This philanthropic institution was established by George W Hinckley, now president of the Good Will Home Association, then a poor preacher who took three homeless boys into his family as a nucleus of the two thousand or more boys and girls who have since been given a home and education under his direction. Mr Hinckley was one of the pioneers in the summer camp movement, having conducted a camp for boys in 1880 on Gardiner's Island, Rhode Island. Needy boys and girls are here given industrial training and schooling. Boys and girls grammar schools are separate, but both attend the same high school. The boys live fifteen in a cottage. Parents or friends may contribute toward the support of the pupil if they are able.

The gateway to Maine, and also its largest city, Portland is on a saddleback hill about three miles long at the southwestern end of Casco Bay. Prosperity has not obliterated the mellow dignity of the past, and the beauty of its homes and public buildings enhances the city's natural loveliness. The City Hall with its municipal auditorium contains the fourth largest organ in the world. A few doors west of Monument Square is the elm-shaded Wadsworth-Longfellow house, carefully preserved by the Maine Historical Society

The Waynflete Latin School is in the West End residential section. On the same street, nearer the center of the city, is the School of Fine Arts of the Portland Society of Art. Westbrook Seminary, in the Deering section to the west, is the oldest educational institution of Universalist origin in the country.

Established by five influential and scholarly Friends who desired a select school for their children, this school is still under the control of Quakers, although patronized by all denominations After three-quarters of a century as a coeducational seminary, the last five years of which were under the direction of the present principals, it was successfully reorganized as a school for girls in 1925 The first wing of an impressive new group of Tudor buildings erected in 1928 doubles the dormitory capacity. The recent prosperity of Oak Grove is chiefly due to the untiring energy of the Owens, and the devotion of the students to them, in response to their real and vital interest in each girl In 1931 Mr. Owen's connection with the state legislature brought added activities and contacts to Oak Grove girls. Maintained through changes and vicissitudes for over a century, North Yarmouth Academy entered in 1926 on a new era with the election of Mr Hyde. Vigorous, far-sighted, he sees the need of the boys and girls of the neighboring coast and islands for a low priced school. After two years, Mr. Hyde's success led Cyrus H. K. Curtis to give over a quarter of a million dollars for new buildings and equipment. A few out of state students are enrolled. See page 843.

The establishment of St. Paul's marked a new trend in education in America. The economic development of the country and the increase of wealth had created a place for a new type of private school which should meet more nearly the requirements of a growing wealthy class who no longer wished for their sons the old type of democratic schooling.

This need was first recognized by Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck, who in 1855 gave his estate near Concord for the purpose, as he expressed it in his deed of gift, "Of endowing a school of the highest class for boys, in which they may obtain an education which shall fit them either for college or business, including thorough intellectual training in the various branches of learning, gymnastics and manly exercises adapted to preserve health and strengthen the physical condition, such æsthetic culture and accomplishments as shall tend to refine the manners and elevate the taste, together with careful moral and religious instruction."

The Rev Henry Augustus Coit at the age of twenty-five was called by the trustees to the position of first rector of the new school Dr Coit, whose family name for two generations had been prominent in American education, had received his training under the Rev William Augustus Muhlenberg, at whose suggestion he was later an instructor in the College of St. James, Hagerstown Dr Muhlenberg's school at College Point, L I, which later became St Paul's College, in its eighteen years existence exerted a great influence on the future private schools in America, for among his pupils in addition to Coit were several future bishops who were later influential in organizing the earliest Episcopalian church schools of the parental type. At St Paul's Dr Coit entered upon a virgin field and during the formative years of the school he indelibly stamped his personality upon it As Dr Coit developed it the school showed the influence of his master, Muhlenberg, in its unreserved adoption of the "in loco parentis" theory Combined with this was much from the English public schools which he had visited, freely adapted to new conditions, and inspiration was without doubt especially derived from Arnold's methods at Rugby "A stern, sad man in clerical black," writes Owen Wister, "he was born seven hundred years later than the days of his spiritual kin" Dr. Coit was an able administrator and a keen student of boys and men. His career was marked by an unswerving adherence to lofty Christian ideals, and the strength of his success lay in his remarkable ability to inspire others with them For nearly forty years, until his death in 1895, Dr Coit was the head and heart of St. Paul's and made it one of the foremost of the American schools Not without some reason has he been called the greatest of American school masters

Even in outdoor life English influence was at first apparent Dr. Coit encouraged cricket rather than baseball. The English schoolroom nomenclature, too, was here introduced to the American boy St. Paul's still has "forms," but the "removes," "evensong" and "matins" and even the cricket of Dr Coit's time are now forgotten. Most of the boys in the three upper forms have separate rooms. The young boys have "alcoves" in the dormitories similar to the "cubicles" of many of the English public schools. This custom here first introduced in the American private schools has been followed by Groton, St. Mark's and other schools.

Dr. Coit's immediate successors were somewhat overshadowed by his greatness He was followed by his brother, Joseph Howland Coit, who had been vice rector since 1865. The Rev. Henry Ferguson, professor of history at Trinity College, who was an "old boy" of St. Paul's, accepted the rectorship for a limited number of years.

Dr Drury, rector since 1911, has brought new inspiration to the school and established new standards of usefulness. Several times candidate for a bishopric, he now devotes himself to the welfare of the school and especially to counteracting the feeling that St Paul's is only for the wealthy. A priest with the ecclesiastical attitude, he has a genius for publicity that reveals itself in his prolific and popular writings. In his readable annual reports he fearlessly advocates progressive innovations which must have had a broadening educational effect upon the alumni. He has introduced with success a measure of student control and self-help in the dormitory life. In many other ways the student life has been broadened and deepened.

St. Paul's is today the largest of the church schools, enrolling over four hundred. The school has the reputation of being aristocratic, but the head master wishes it to be known as democratic. On the waiting list of over a thousand, about one-fifth are sons of alumni. Some forty-five boys receive partial remission of tuition or full scholarships each year.

Exeter was founded by John Phillips, who, stirred by the immediate success of Phillips Academy at Andover, founded by his brother and his nephew, established The Phillips Exeter Academy in his home town in New Hampshire. It was incorporated by the legislature in 1781 and was opened early in 1783.

Benjamin Abbot, the second principal, ruled over the institution with great power and wisdom for the term of fifty years. He had been trained at Andover under Principal Pearson, graduated from Harvard in 1788, and came immediately to Phillips Exeter where he became perhaps the most famous of all the early academy teachers "Little Daniel Webster came to him for schooling in 1796 Edward Everett finished his preparation for college here at the age of thirteen Lewis Cass came to the school at the age of ten, a headstrong boy, fond of pranks and of outdoor life, and here he remained for five years and made a very good record" Lincoln, Grant, and Cleveland sent their sons to Exeter. In 1838 Gideon L. Soule, who had already been a teacher in the school for seventeen years, succeeded Dr. Abbot, and in 1872 the fiftieth year of his continuous service in the academy was celebrated.

Exeter's alumni represent every state of the Union and many foreign countries. No other school has given so many distinguished men to the nation. In 1880, at the close of the first century of her existence, Exeter numbered among her alumni "nine college presidents, including three of Harvard, fifty-two college professors, two hundred and forty-five teachers, thirty-six authors, five ambassadors, seven cabinet ministers, twenty-eight members of Congress, twelve governors of states, a long list of Federal and State judges, Army and Naval officers, and more than a thousand professional men " Such a contribution to the nation's assets must be due to the spirit of Exeter, which has not only attracted pupils of promise, but accounts for their fruitful development

Exeter has always been characterized by a spirit of earnestness, sincerity and independence — dignity without pose or affectation There is no veneering process at Exeter — that which is within is brought out There is little of the paternal attitude. A boy must stand upon his own feet

The traditional saying that the academy has no rules until they are broken, although a humorous overstatement, still expresses the belief of the school that the boy's own conscience and good sense are in the main sufficient for right conduct Rules relieve a boy of the responsibility of judging for himself An alumnus, recently asked what he considered the most signal benefit a boy derived from Exeter, replied, "Readiness to take responsibility " Thus the academy is today fulfilling the purpose of its founder "to learn them the GREAT END AND REAL BUSINESS OF LIVING " Education at Exeter, then, is not mere preparation for life It is life

At Exeter there is a progressive spirit which accepts nothing as necessarily final in educational work With all its rich traditions Exeter has never become moss grown There was no Theological Seminary as at Andover to hold it so strictly to orthodoxy, and its students continued to resort to the more liberal Harvard, and today Exeter remains to a marked extent a school preparatory to Harvard There is more of the university atmosphere, of the freedom and the fostering of the individual at Exeter than at perhaps any other great American school The atmosphere at Exeter is essentially democratic and thoroughly American Not only does it attract seven hundred and fifty students from all over the country, but admission is in no way dependent upon class, color or wealth, or the lack of any of these Each boy stands on his merits

The large number of scholarships long given from its liberal endowment funds have enhanced the spirit of democracy and helped maintain standards of scholarship As at Andover the dormitory system is a relatively new feature. During its early history students were quartered in the houses of the townspeople, and something of this still survives, though in the last half century more dormitories have been erected, largely through the generosity of alumni, where the boy receives much the same supervision as in smaller schools. To meet the new demands on the secondary schools Exeter inaugurated for the first time in 1919 a regular summer session which offers instruction to boys who wish to make more rapid progress, or to make up deficiencies in their school work.

The long line of principals, men of strong personality, may have prompted President Eliot of Harvard to characterize Exeter as "One of the most precious institutions of the country." Not the least of these was Harlan P. Amen, who, coming to the principalship after "a period of executive laxness," in his eighteen years of office, by strong and sympathetic leadership, brought Exeter again to her ancient standards. Dr. Perry, elected principal in 1914, was previously a master at Lawrenceville School and a professor at Williams College. To him in large part is due the recent great development in material plant and endowment through his close contact with the alumni in all parts of the country. The seven Harkness millions, received in 1930, enable principal Perry to carry out a tutorial system, the plan for which was perfected by his recent study of English schools. See page 682.

New Hampton, formerly New Hampton Literary Institution and Commercial College, and the oldest Baptist school in New England, was until 1926 coeducational. That year Mr Smith, one of six members of his family who had been educated at New Hampton, took over the direction of the institution and completely reorganized it. Today it offers a vigorous, wholesome life to boys from widely distributed regions, a little more discriminatingly selected than in most schools of its type and moderate rate. The college entrance record is good and the non-college boy is given work preparatory for business that incorporates one year of junior college work. See page 688.

Phillips Academy is the oldest of the great national schools which have become such distinctive features in American education. Its founder, Samuel Phillips, and its first head master, Eliphalet Pearson, were both students at Dummer and classmates at Harvard College, graduating in the class of 1771. In 1778 Samuel Phillips, together with his father and his uncle John, deeded both land and money for the purpose of founding the school. According to this document, the donors proposed "to lay the foundation of a public free SCHOOL OR ACADEMY for the purpose of instructing Youth, not only in English and Latin Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic and those Sciences wherein they are commonly taught; but more especially to learn them the great end and real business of living." Further on, "it is again declared that the first and principal object of this Institution is the promotion of true piety and virtue."

Andover was doubtless chosen as the site because it was the old home of the family, as the father of the two brothers had been a former master of the Grammar School at Andover. The school opened in the midst of the Revolution and in 1780 was incorporated with the title of Phillips Academy, the first chartered academy in New England. Andover has been fortunate from the first in attracting men of the highest ideals to its control. Eliphalet Pearson, the first principal, was a man of great force and versatility and of commanding presence who held his pupils well in awe and was known to the boys as "Elephant" Pearson. He afterward became professor of Hebrew at Harvard and still later in the Theological Seminary at Andover.

There were twenty-three boys in the academy, when, in 1810, Dr John Adams came to the master's throne, which he occupied for twenty-three years. By 1817 the number of boys had increased to one hundred, and during his time Dr Adams admitted 1119 pupils, nearly one-fifth of whom became ministers. Under Samuel H Taylor, a man of picturesque and striking personality, head master from 1837 to 1871, the institution gradually took on its present character. After his death, however, it declined in prestige until it was rejuvenated and brought in touch with modern methods of education by Dr Cecil F P Bancroft, principal from 1874 to 1901.

As is natural Andover and Exeter have much in common. In the early days no housing provision was made for the boys, but they were left to the mercies of the townspeople. Both from the first repudiated the "in loco parentis" theory of school life. They attracted "students with a definite educational purpose," declaring that "the academy is not a suitable place for boys who are idle, insubordinate or lacking in self-control; nor for such as require the constant supervision of a teacher and the routine of the schoolroom in order to enforce industry and fidelity."

Andover perhaps more than Exeter long remained conservative, less influenced by the Unitarian movements which have stirred New England, and perhaps for that reason Andover early became primarily a preparatory school for more conservative Yale rather than Harvard, which soon came under more liberal influences. Andover has in its long career prepared more boys for Yale than any other school in the country. As at Exeter democracy and simplicity have been its tone. About one hundred boys each year receive some assistance in paying their expenses.

Phillips Academy today enrolls over six hundred boys, more than half of whom come from outside of New England, and it is truly "national in its representation and democratic in its life and spirit, and is 'equally open to youth of requisite qualifications from every quarter'." It endeavors to enable its students, as the catalog further states, "to pass by gradual and natural stages from the paternalism of home life to the freedom that awaits them in college. Dormitories in charge of married instructors now provide a natural and progressive development.

The archæology museum endowed in 1901 is unique, and the new art gallery, recently completed, contains a notable and valuable collection of American paintings.

More than twenty thousand boys have graduated from the school, about sixty per cent of whom have gone to Yale and perhaps fifteen per cent to Harvard. Its more than nine thousand loyal living alumni are organized in numerous associations throughout the country. The continued interest of the Andover alumni through the years has brought to the school increased endowments and gifts. The enthusiastic interest of Thomas Cochran has been outstanding.

Dr. Stearns, head master since 1903, was an instructor from 1897. He is an alumnus of the school, of Andover Theological Seminary, and of Amherst. He is the first principal who has given his whole time to administration, doing no teaching while in office, and has upheld the cultural ideals of the past. During his administration the growth in physical resources in the last few years alone has exceeded that of the whole previous period. Over $10,000,000 has recently been raised and has been used to increase salaries and to erect new buildings. $700,000 worth of paintings, representing the best works of American painters, is an outstanding acquisition. Ten teachers' foundations of $160,000 each have recently been made available for faculty members. See page 683.

BOSTON, MASS. Pop 748,060 (1920) 781,188 (1930).

Still a stronghold of Puritanism, Boston is the largest Irish-Catholic city in the world. That Boston is a desirable place to come from is attested by the great numbers who claim it as home but who never lived within the municipality. Bostonians may well pride themselves on their conservatism, for among them have been the most radical of Americans who, derided and mobbed, have been later enshrined in bronze. Main Street and Zenith started in Boston and extended westward along with Puritanical censorship, Christian Science, and shoe manufacturing.

The City has turned its back on its island-studded harbor to face the Back Bay and the West whose railroads and mines it has exploited to the enrichment of its families even unto the fourth generation.

Except for Beacon Hill, the city has never improved its points of vantage. Its heights remain uncrowned, its waterfront misused. The golden dome on Beacon Hill, the hub-cap of the universe, long looked down on the greatest educational center and student population, and until the dawn of the twentieth century, on the literary center of the country. The higher institutions of learning include, in Boston, Boston University (Methodist), Boston College (Catholic), and Simmons College. Across the Charles are the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard, and Radcliffe. On the outer fringes are Tufts and Wellesley. These with the professional and vocational schools enroll upwards of 30,000 students.

The private schools, patronized by upper middle class families, are in Back Bay and the Fenway. As the wealthier Bostonians live mostly outside the city, Brookline, the Newtons, Milton, Dedham, Cambridge, Weston, Waltham and Concord, all have their private schools, separately treated.

Chauncy Hall is the only school preparing exclusively for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Established by Gideon F Thayer, it was for thirty years a pioneer in education. Military training, coeducation and kindergarten work were introduced before other schools generally had adopted them. Its graduates are found in many scientific schools and colleges throughout the country. The school has always been in the neighborhood of Copley Square and in the hundred years of its existence it has had four changes in location and five in administration. Mr Kurt, sole owner since 1910, has been connected with the school since 1896. Under his rigorous and efficient management the school has been highly successful.

First on Chestnut Street and long on Marlborough Street, early in January 1927 the school moved into the old University Club. This is a continuation of Miss Folsom's School which for many years enjoyed the highest social standing. Mary C S May established a regime which appealed to a characteristic Boston clientele by whom she was regarded with trust and confidence. In 1918, after many years of service, she was succeeded by Miss Degen, long her associate. Miss Walley was made associate in 1925. There is a strong college trained faculty. In addition to regular college preparatory and post graduate courses, the school offers special advantages in French. A European group of six girls under a member of the faculty was recently inaugurated.

Roxbury Latin School is the oldest endowed secondary school in the United States. Nine years after the establishment of Harvard College, and only fifteen years after the founding of Boston, it began to prepare boys for Harvard and has continued its work without interruption. It resulted largely from the influential efforts of John Eliot, the "Apostle to the Indians," who when minister of the First Church of Roxbury, together with other inhabitants of the town, signed a statement that they "in consideration of their religious care of posterity, have taken into consideration how necessary the education of their children in literature will be, to fit them for public service, both in Church and Commonwealth, in succeeding ages. They, therefore, unanimously have consented and agreed to erect a free school in the said Town of Roxbury."

"The Free Schoole in Roxburie," as it was called, was not then free in the sense of being supported by uniform taxation or free from all tuition fees. But today the school is free to all boys living within the limits of the original town of Roxbury. In 1671 Thomas Bell, formerly a freeman of Roxbury, died in London, willing two hundred acres of Roxbury lands to the school and naming the Rev. John Eliot and two other officers of the First Church as trustees of the endowment.

Cotton Mather, half a century later, wrote of the school, "Roxbury could not live quietly without a free school in the Town and the Issue has been one which has almost made me put the Title of Schola Illustris upon that little Nursery, that is, that Roxbury has afforded more Scholars, first for the College, and then for the Publick, than any Town of its Bigness, or if I mistake not, of twice its Bigness, in all New England."

The school has always been intimately associated with Harvard, fitting most of its pupils for the higher work there. College preparation in Colonial days was a matter of intensive education. The regulations for admission were thus stated: "When any Scholar is able to understand Tully, or such like classical Latine Author ex tempore, and make and speake true Latine in Verse and Prose, suo ut aunt Marte, and decline perfectly the Paradigm's of Nounes and Verbes in the Greek tongue. Let him then and not before be capable of admission into the College."

Though controlled by a self-perpetuating board of trustees who are bound by its ancient charter, the school has kept abreast of the educational changes of the years. Inherent worth has given it vitality and importance.

William C. Collar, for more than half a century connected with the school, in his long career attained a national position in the educational world. Appointed a master in 1857 and head master in 1867, he resigned in 1907 and died in 1916. D. O. S. Lowell, a graduate of Bowdoin, became a master in the school in 1884 and was head master from 1909 to his retirement in June, 1921. He was succeeded by Dr. Thompson, a graduate of Amherst and former head of the English department at Lawrenceville. Under him highest scholastic standards have been maintained. In 1927 the school moved from its old site on Kearsarge Avenue, Roxbury, to its present building, the gift of alumni and friends. See page 697.

The Wentworth Institute was founded by Arioch Wentworth. It was incorporated in 1904. The board of directors spent seven years investigating the educational needs of the community and then formally opened the school which has since been enlarged by the erection of additional buildings. Both day and evening instruction is given. The courses are open to practically anyone who is "thoroughly in earnest." Applicants over sixteen are admitted to the one year day courses. High school graduates or boys eighteen years of age with industrial experience and sufficient training to pass the entrance examinations are admitted to the two year day courses. The students come from eighteen states and foreign countries. The equipment is complete and the work is highly efficient.

The Winsor School is the leading day school for girls of Boston and is the result of the notable executive capacity of Mary Pickard Winsor, whose sister has created the Roger Ascham School, and brother, the Middlesex School. Its continued and successful growth necessitated repeated removal, until in 1908 it was incorporated and moved to its present building. Miss Lord, who took over the active management of the school upon Miss Winsor's retirement in 1922, is assisted by a strong administrative and teaching staff. The grounds of the Longwood Cricket Club were acquired in 1924 and a large gymnasium erected in order that regular physical exercise might be assured.

Bradford Academy, the oldest institution in New England for the higher education of women, was established by the parishioners of the Congregational Church of the town of Bradford and until 1836 was coeducational. The school has been fortunate throughout its history in having on its board of trustees men and women of unusual capacity and devotion to the interests of Bradford. Alice Freeman Palmer long took active interest. The unusual advantages of Bradford early drew students from all over New England, but for many decades the patronage has been national. During the century and more of its existence over nine thousand students have attended the school. The strong personality of Laura A. Knott, principal from 1901 to 1918, was long stamped on the life and work of the school. With Marion Coats, principal from 1918 to 1927, the great impetus toward the graduate courses began, culminating in the acceptance of Bradford as a junior college member of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools under Miss Denworth in 1930. Miss Denworth, formerly principal of the Moorestown Friends' School and head mistress of the Stevens School, Germantown, Pa., brought to the school many of the ideals inculcated by Teachers College from which institution she received her doctorate in 1927. Under Miss Denworth a raised standard of salaries has attracted a highly trained faculty, no member of which has less than the equivalent of a masters degree. See page 780.

BROOKLINE, MASS. Alt 43 ft. Pop 37,748 (1920) 47,490 (1930).

Brookline, long the wealthiest town in the United States, is almost surrounded by the city of Boston. Coolidge Corner and Brookline Village, the shopping centers, are only three miles from the State House. The growing Jewish population, attracted by the low tax rate, finds its habitat chiefly in the numerous apartment houses which are restricted by zoning to certain sections. Four conspicuous synagogues, two within the confines of the town and two in adjacent parts of Boston, serve them. Four hills with winding shaded roads provide a beautiful setting for many homes. Great estates, some of the oldest in the country, crown the hills in the southern part of the town.

Between Coolidge Corner and Boston are The Longwood Country Day and the Dexter Schools. Choate School is near Coolidge Corner while nearer Brookline Village is The Park School. The Rivers School is on Fisher Hill. Nearby, in the Chestnut Hill section, is The Beaver Country Day School and just over the municipal line, in Newton, the Chestnut Hill School. The Gothic buildings of Boston College occupy a commanding site above Chestnut Hill Reservoir.

The Beaver Country Day School was organized and incorporated by progressive and liberal minded parents who wished to bring to Boston the more progressive educational methods. Dr Smith, who had successfully developed the Park School, Baltimore, has been in charge of Beaver since the beginning. The school now has three well equipped departments in the new plant, and supervises kindergartens and primary classes at the Beaver School in Boston and a small unit in Chestnut Hill. The school has been extraordinarily successful, not only admitting from the large number of applicants an increasing number, but adding constantly to its activities and the development of the school plant. Among the many unique features are the kitchens in which girls are given experience under home conditions, courses in instrumental and vocal music for which school credit is given, and every opportunity for instruction in the decorative arts and sciences. Among the many features unusual in secondary school plants are a completely equipped little theatre and beautiful art and library quarters. Formerly coeducational, since 1931 only girls have been enrolled. See page 784.

The Browne and Nichols School was founded by George H Browne and Edgar H. Nichols, Harvard classmates, soon after their graduation. Two years after Mr Nichols died, in 1910, Willard Reed and Mr Browne continued as joint principals until 1928 when the existing stock was bought up and the school reincorporated under a board of trustees G L Nicholas, on the faculty for three years and before that instructor at St Paul's, was then made head. Practically all the boys are from greater Boston and are prepared chiefly for Harvard and M I T. The first of the new school buildings on Nichols Field was dedicated in 1931 and shortly thereafter George Browne died. Mr Twitchell, for seven years on the faculty of Milton Academy and recently secretary of the Secondary Education Board, was elected head master in 1931.

Concord is both a literary shrine and a mecca of the patriotic. As the home of Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau and the Alcotts it has the significance in American literature of Stratford in England or Weimar in Germany. The slow flowing Concord and Assabet fortunately turn no mill wheels and have brought no industrialism. "The rude bridge that arched the flood," now a crude and cracking cement structure, draws all feet toward it. Concord Academy occupies the former Sherman Hoar estate and the adjacent property on Main Street. The Fenn School is on Monument Street, about a half mile from the bridge. The Surette Summer School of Music is held in the parish rooms of the historic First Church on Lexington Road. Three miles from the center of the town are the brick Colonial buildings and spacious grounds of the Middlesex School.

Deerfield as it exists today is a monument to the genius of Mr. Boyden, who has dedicated to it his whole career, and has developed from an old New England academy one of the nation's most notable schools for boys. Here he was the first to work out successfully a system of compulsory athletics. The social community life of the school and the general participation in dramatics are made use of in training and developing the personality of each boy. The Amherst-Williams-Dartmouth tradition is strong, though a few boys each year take College Board examinations. The knowledge of the success of the school has been spread so broadly that Mr. Boyden is able to select from a great number of candidates the type that he can develop most successfully. Recognition of the excellent work done at Deerfield has recently brought funds and the interest of wealthy men, which have made possible the erection of new and attractive buildings, dormitories and classrooms, planned by Charles A. Platt. See page 703.

Williston Academy was established and endowed by Samuel Williston, a wealthy manufacturer of the town. The purpose of the founder in placing English and scientific courses on the same plane as the classical courses was at that time a radical departure. Mr. Williston gave freely of his money to equip lecture rooms and laboratories. Under Josiah Clark, principal from 1849 to 1863, the standards of the school instruction in ancient classics were established. Under Marshall Henshaw (1863-76) Mr. Williston's ideal of a school in which science, mathematics and English should be held in equal honor and pursued with equal thoroughness with the ancient classics, was realized. Of the ten thousand who have attended the school during its long existence, more than one-third have entered thirty and more colleges and universities, one-fifth, the learned professions. Seven of its teachers have become college presidents; seventeen, college professors, nine, principals of other schools. Dr. Joseph Sawyer, after being connected for half a century with Williston, resigned in 1919 because of failing health. Mr. Galbraith, for nearly twenty years master at Middlesex School, has been principal since 1919 and has succeeded in broadening the school's appeal, modernizing its outlook, and bringing its standards up to those of the best college preparatory schools. New buildings and endowments have brought added facilities within recent years.

WILLISTON JUNIOR SCHOOL is presided over by Robert B. Cunningham, A.M. Though an integral part of Williston Academy it has two separate houses for the thirty boys in grades four to eight and has its own faculty of six. The majority of the boys enter the senior school. See page 701.

This school offers a close, intimate and stimulating environment for a limited number of girls of certain defined types. It is largely the expression of the personalities of the two ladies, its principals, who maintain standards of culture and have an interest and human understanding of their pupils difficult to duplicate. Groton School has long been generally regarded as socially perhaps the most desirable of the church preparatory schools. It was the result of economic causes and a personality. The further accumulation of wealth and the development of social planes which had led to the founding of St. Paul's and St. Mark's resulted in the establishment of Groton in 1884 by Dr. Peabody of the Salem Peabodys, long prominent in the mercantile and philanthropic life of the country. He was an all round athlete, a scholar, and yet a very graceful and sophisticated man of the world, according to Arthur Ruhl. But in his first charge in the raw west, Tombstone, Arizona, he had demonstrated even to cowboys and gamblers that he was a stalwart, full-blooded man.

As Groton approaches the half century mark we must doff our hats to the man, a true New England worthy of the type and class of President Eliot, an aristocratic soul who in a democratic spirit has built an institution, the embodiment of his own uncompromising personality, in which acolytes serve and disciples worship and which has brought nurture, intellectual pap and a spirit of aristocratic democracy to such typically American families as the Roosevelts.

Groton began with a small number of pupils secured through advertising in the papers, but through a natural inheritance, from friend to friend, rather than from conscious effort on Dr Peabody's part, it has attained the highest social prestige. So long is the waiting list that as an old graduate expressed it, "A Groton man wires to Dr Peabody as soon as his son is born. Others generally think a letter is quick enough."

Although originally English in its inspiration and atmosphere, Groton is one of the most remarkable and successful institutions in American education today. It was established with the same earnestness and sincerity of purpose as was any foundation of Puritan times. From every American point of view it is exotic, but it is sincere and its sincerity commands not only the devotion of its masters and the loyalty of its alumni, but the respect of those least in sympathy with its ideals. Groton from the first attempted to steer a course between the "in loco parentis" plan of St Paul's and the larger freedom of Andover and Exeter. A modification of the monitorial system which for twenty years had been in successful use at St Mark's was adopted at Groton and has from the first proved successful, but at Groton the boys are called prefects. A head prefect and six prefects are appointed annually from the upper form. They exercise a considerable measure of influence in the student body, which develops responsibility in the holders of these offices and lessens the load of the masters. The boys at Groton do not have separate rooms, all except the prefects live in cubicles. The system that is followed at St Paul's and St Mark's for the younger boys is here continued through all forms, and Groton's system in this respect has been copied in some other church schools. Two upper forms are provided with studies and the lower forms study at desks in large schoolrooms. The relations between master and pupil at Groton are particularly intimate in all branches of school activity. Boys for admission are selected in order from the lists on which they are registered at birth, without discrimination as to their individuality or development. Of recent years an effort has been made to introduce a democratic leaven by admitting each year eight boys not so registered, who show high scholarship on competitive examinations. The previous environment of these boys, however, must meet such a standard as would be approved by those patrons whose sons enter through the waiting list. The course, too, has been broadened to include science in all forms, music, drawing and some manual training, including woodworking and printing.

Scholastic seclusion has been sedulously sought. The most prominent feature of the buildings, well known for their architectural excellence, is the chapel tower, which dominates the countryside. W. Amory Gardner, a trustee, and long a master in the school, gave the chapel, a notable example of late decorated Gothic, and at his death bequeathed half a million to the school.

Tabor Academy was founded and endowed by Elizabeth Taber. Originally coeducational, the school was completely reorganized when Mr. Lillard, formerly assistant to the head master at Andover, took charge in 1916. Advantage is taken of the ideal location to make nautical training an essential part of the program. The school is largely college preparatory and boys, whose records warrant it, are rewarded by opportunities for cruising and travel to Central America and Europe during the spring and summer vacations. Mr. Lillard has been largely responsible for the project of cooperating with the Ecole du Montcel, near Versailles, in sending American boys to France each year and in offering scholarships permitting French students to take similar courses at schools in this country. Summer term exchanges are arranged with schools in England, France and Germany under Mr. Lillard's personal direction. From a local New England Academy, Milton has become today one of the leading preparatory schools for boys. It looks back on more than a century of interrupted history. Opening in 1807, with short periods of suspension it continued until 1866, when, on the establishment of a town high school, it was closed. The academy reopened in 1885 on a new site and until 1901 was coeducational. The school achieved great success during the long administration of Harrison Otis Apthorp. After an interregnum of less successful management under principal Cobb the academy regained its former prestige under the joint direction of Mr Field, a naturalist and entomologist of scientific training, and Mr Lane, principal of the boys school for many years Under Mr Field the school has become especially notable for its science teaching and as a center for professional secondary educationists. Three separate schools are now maintained under the same direction — the boys, the girls, and the coeducational lower school With an abundance of applicants from the local wealthy families and from others who move to Milton to share the social luster and prestige, and with a scattering of boys from families of alumni from a distance, the school selects and retains those who conform to the type it fosters

MILTON ACADEMY GIRLS SCHOOL, one of the three departments of Milton Academy, is for day pupils only, but Hathaway House, under the supervision of the academy, provides for nineteen girls Sarah S Goodwin, principal for many years, was succeeded in 1928 by Ellen Faulkner, M A , Bryn Mawr.

The Fessenden School is for young boys exclusively, fitting them for the leading secondary schools. It was established by Mr Fessenden and has had a consistent growth as appreciation for all that it offers has become more widespread. Without the support of any special clique or denominational influence the school has won a national patronage. Mr. Fessenden is an efficient organizer and a man of modest and somewhat retiring temperament but winning personality. Both he and Mrs Fessenden are highly successful in creating a genuine and sincere home atmosphere, the latter giving the boys many little attentions unusual in a school. Of recent years much of the administrative detail of the school has fallen on their son Hart, a Williams graduate, in the capacity of assistant head. The masters are young men of fineness and sympathy who have caught the prevailing spirit and communicated it to the boys. The school was incorporated 1930 under trustees. See page 694.

This school was established at the suggestion of President Seelye of Smith College, as a preparatory school for Smith. From 1885 until 1909 it underwent several reorganizations. Helen E. Thompson, connected with the school since 1879, and principal since 1909, became emerita in 1929. Her conscientious interest and devotion to the school resulted in a strong feeling of loyalty in faculty and students. Miss Judd, for some years secretary of the Board of Admissions at Smith College, and more recently associate head mistress of the Burnham School, became head mistress on Miss Thompson's retirement. Miss Kingsley, a graduate of the school, came from Miss Madeira's School in 1928 as associate principal. A European school year, dividing the time equally between Rome and Paris, was inaugurated in 1929 under the direction of Mrs. Frederick T. Rouse, a member of the faculty for three years. Only senior students and accredited alumnæ of Mary Burnham are enrolled. See page 786.

Northampton School for Girls, opened by Miss Whitaker and Miss Bement with the sanction of Smith College, is now recommended by a considerable number of other colleges for preparatory work. Both principals were teachers in the Capen School until its discontinuance in 1920 after which they were connected with other Massachusetts private girls schools. Exclusively for college preparation, Northampton has been successful from the start. The atmosphere is serious, the classes small. Particular emphasis is placed on a one year intensive review for college entrance. Tutoring is available during August. See page 791.

On the broad terraces of the Connecticut, Northfield commands beautiful prospects. The Dickinson Memorial Library is on the site of the old Dickinson Fort. On both sides of the river are The Northfield Schools founded by Dwight L. Moody, evangelist, in his boyhood home, later his summer residence. In 1912 they were incorporated under a board of trustees with William R. Moody, son of the founder, as president. With more than 1100 students, they are now the largest secondary schools under one management. The deficit has been made up by annual contributions from thousands of persons responding to individual solicitation or mass appeal from churches and societies. The alumni, too, spread out all over the globe in fifty countries, have made their contributions. In 1926 the trustees met the conditions of the times and departing from the traditions of the school, appointed Elliott Speer, Andover and Princeton trained, and for two years on the faculty of Lafayette College, a man of liberal religious views, as president. He has brought warmth and human quality to an institution formerly cold and hard in its righteousness. His charm of manner, engaging personality and tact should succeed in winning for the schools the millions they need to continue their growth.

Mr Moody's purpose in establishing this school was to make thorough secondary schooling available to poor boys. He provided that each boy was to work on the farm or in the buildings every day. The school has from the first afforded abundant opportunity for a boy to secure an education or preparation for college. The founder's rigorous ideals and ideas of life and training are still held for the guidance of youth under Dr. Cutler, principal since 1900.

The girls, as originally planned, still perform part of the domestic work which helps to keep the tuition rate low. Charles E. Dickerson, principal for many years, held rigidly to the letter of the law as laid down by the founder and resigned in 1925 when pressure was brought for more liberal policies. Frank L. Duley, long on the faculty, was acting head until 1929 when, in accordance with the modern and liberal policy of the trustees and the president, Miss Wilson was brought from the faculty of Smith College where she had been assistant professor of religious and biblical literature and director of social service.

This school has since its establishment enjoyed a consistent and solid growth in numbers and reputation. In 1919 it was incorporated. The school is the creation of and centers around Mr. Buck, who for eight years had been senior master at Hackley School. Mr. Buck's masterful and buoyant personality dominates the school and finds expression in vigorous and wholesome ideals. He is admirably supplemented by his wife, who plays a vital part in the life of the school, though she takes no formal part. Both imbue the school community with homelike wholesomeness, and the directness of the methods, the sincerity of the atmosphere and the efficiency of the simple organization command the admiration of all who know the school. The youngest boys have single rooms, the upper class boys may have single or double rooms with a common study and are given considerable liberty and responsibility to bridge the gap from school to college. It is a preparatory school of five forms and the boys come from all parts of the country. Study hours are carefully supervised and deficiencies must be made up each day. Without conscious effort the school achieves much more than mere college preparation, though this latter is met in a scholarly and efficient way. See page 704.

St. Mark's School was founded by Joseph Burnett, a Boston merchant and manufacturer, who is said to have been inspired by the success of St Paul's and by the desire to have a similar school in his own native town of Southborough. Members of the Burnett family have continued on its administrative board, watchful of the interests of the school. Beginning with twelve boys the school has at intervals increased its dormitory accommodation and in recent years has enrolled over a hundred and ninety. Assured of prestige from the first, it developed steadily in strength and efficiency under the capable management of William E. Peck, head master from 1882 until 1894.

St Mark's is a church school of the parental type. A notable feature is that all the school activities are confined to one large building. "That the entire life of the school should be under one roof," one of its masters wrote a few years ago, "its chapel services, study, recitations, eating and sleeping, means much not only for convenience, but also for community of interest among the boys and between masters and pupils." The boys of the three lower forms do not have separate rooms but occupy dormitories with windowed alcoves.

Though the general policy of St Mark's was modeled after that of St. Paul's, one notable innovation in American school boy life was introduced which has proved a valuable contribution and has been extensively adopted by private schools since established. A modification of the English "Lancastrian Monitorial System" which had its origin in England early in the nineteenth century was adapted to American conditions. From its opening St Mark's has had its present system of monitors, six or seven boys chosen from the sixth form who "are the representatives of the school, have certain duties and a general oversight of the life of the boys. They are supposed to stand for the school ideals and to exert their influence and leadership."

St. Mark's offers an intimate, proscribed, community life, admission to which is eagerly sought and rigidly restricted. Under the Rev. Dr. William G. Thayer, head master from 1894 until 1930, the ideals of the school were zealously maintained. With Dr. Thayer's retirement on the sixty-fifth anniversary of the school, the alumni established a quarter million Rev. and Mrs. Thayer fund. Dr. Parkman, an old St. Mark's boy who since his Harvard graduation had spent his time at that institution in graduate and administrative work, was appointed head master in 1930.

Founded by William Dummer, Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, who in 1761 bequeathed his house and farm at Byfield for the establishment of a grammar school, this school was first opened under the charge of the celebrated Samuel Moody, who had graduated from Harvard College in 1746. Mr Moody made it a grammar school of the older type, and prepared for Harvard many boys who became prominent in the life of the nation, including the founder and first master of Andover. It was always a democratic school accepting boys from all classes. After years of decadence it was revived by Dr Charles S. Ingham, headmaster from 1907 until his resignation in 1930. Mr Eames, young, alert, inspired by Mr Boyden at Deerfield, with educational experience at Nichols and Deerfield, and educational backgrounds of Amherst and Harvard, brought new life to the school, refurbished its name, plant, equipment, raised the standards, improved the quality of the student body. Opened by Mr. Trevoy, for many years assistant head master of Stone, now Storm King School, and more recently resident trustee of Deerfield Academy, Beacon School specializes in college preparation. The life is personal and intimate. Frequent contacts between the school and members of the community are fostered, and opportunities are utilized to enlarge the horizons of the boys and to develop tastes and interests, — in arts and music especially. Altogether the school has an atmosphere of culture and intellectual interest. See page 698.

Founded by Julia A. and Sarah P. Eastman with the cooperation of Wellesley College as a preparatory school for that institution, these schools have been under the exceptionally strong management of Miss Cooke since 1899. To her administrative ability is due the fact that Dana Hall has become one of the leading secondary schools in the country. Miss Cooke is a woman of remarkable personality, clear-sightedness and executive capacity, with the highest ideals of womanhood. She makes a strong appeal to girls and her influence upon them is inspiring and lasting. The heads of departments in all four schools are women of unusual capacity and enthusiasm.

DANA HALL sends about two-thirds of its graduates each year to the leading women's colleges. It has an enrollment of two hundred fifty. Dorothy Waldo is in charge of this department.

PINE MANOR SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE, opened in 1911, is intended for the graduates of Dana Hall and other secondary schools who desire advanced academic work, music, art, or courses preparatory to efficient homemaking. It became a member of the American Association of Junior Colleges in 1930. Mrs. Marie Warren Potter is president.

TENACRE, opened in 1910 for younger girls, prepares for Dana Hall and other secondary schools. It has an enrollment of sixty. Mrs. Helen Wells is the director of this department.

WESTLEA, the graduate School of Music, was formally opened as a separate department in 1925. Laura Henry, long connected with the school, is in charge. There is an enrollment of forty. See page 789.

Beginning September 1931, the upper branch of this school occupies its new plant. The Cambridge School was established by Arthur Gilman with the plan of affording women a systematic course of study under Harvard instructors, resulting in the "Annex" that later became Radcliffe. This led to the establishment of a school for younger girls which soon became the foremost girls school for the families of Old Cambridge. In 1918 Mary E. Haskell, A.B., Wellesley, became principal, and the name was changed to Cambridge-Haskell School. From 1922 until 1929 Hope Conklin Macintosh was in charge. Mr. French, who successfully reorganized the old Derby Academy, Hingham, as a progressive, modern, coeducational school, came to this school in 1930 as head master. Under his direction the school assumed its original name and was made coeducational throughout. The country day school plan is followed and bus service furnished for pupils from Cambridge and adjoining towns. The boarding group may be on either the five day or full week plan, with separate houses for boys and girls. College preparation continues to be the chief interest of the school as in the past, but the rich curriculum provides generously for the development of special individual capacities and gifts. Worcester, the "Heart of the Commonwealth" as it loves to call itself, is second only to Boston among Massachusetts cities, and third among New England cities. Both as an industrial and educational center it manifests vigorous enterprise. The city has spread from its original level site up on the surrounding higher land, and now boasts that like Rome it is built on its seven hills. The numerous parks aggregate 1100 acres in area. The many historical houses and sites have been zealously marked by public spirited citizens. The Worcester Art Museum is especially strong in the work of recent American artists.

Among the chief educational institutions are Clark University, the Holy Cross College, a Jesuit institution, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, one of the leading technical schools of the country, the Worcester Boys Trade School and the State Normal School. In the eastern portion the Worcester Academy buildings are on a hilltop not far from the center of the city. The playing fields are farther out. The Bancroft School is in the west side residential section.

Worcester Academy is today a well equipped school offering complete preparation for college or technical and engineering schools. It occupies a middle ground between the large academies and the smaller preparatory schools and offers many of the advantages of both. Dr D W Abercrombie, during the thirty-six years of his administration from 1882, made a great boys school from a coeducational Baptist academy. Mr Holmes, long connected with the faculty, became head master in 1918 and George D Church was made registrar. Together, without sacrificing the rugged democracy which has long been characteristic of the school, they have brought the scholarship and personnel to a higher standard and have inaugurated new policies that have changed the atmosphere of the whole school. There is careful supervision of the boys health, physical development, spending money and surplus time, and numerous extra curricular activities enrich the life of the school. See page 699.

This splendidly appointed private boarding school was founded by the Rev John B. Diman, now head master of Portsmouth Priory School, who was successful in inspiring his patrons to liberal gifts. In 1917 Stephen P. Cabot who had been a master in the school since 1901 became head master. During Dr. Cabot's administration the school went through a period of great material growth. He resigned in 1926, and after a year under Russell H. Nevins, long a master in the school, St. George's came under the administration of Mr. Merrick, who had been a master at St. Paul's School, Concord, for thirteen years. St. George's is a church school with a chaplain in charge of the religious instruction. This school aims to develop the sturdiness of character found in the old New England stock of Colonial times To secure this each boy gives a specified share of his time to some community occupation on the farm, in the carpentry shop or in the forest Students participate as citizens in all the operations of the small commonwealth and in the planning of their own education. An effective effort is made to fit the school to each individual. Theodate Pope, now Mrs John Wallace Riddle, established the school in 1918 as a memorial to her father, although it was not opened until ten years later The whole concept of this school—the plan of education, the layout of the grounds, and the architecture—is the creation of the founder The buildings carry out in their hand construction the modified Cotswold village plan on which the school is modeled Francis Mitchell Froelicher, an outstanding exponent of progressive education, came from the Oak Lane Country Day School, Philadelphia, to serve as the first provost, 1927-29 Dr Kammerer, formerly dean of Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, and a trustee of the Fay School, Southborough, succeeded him in the reorganization of 1930. In 1912 there came to the parish of St. James in Danbury, after an apprenticeship at Grace Church Chapel in New York, a man with a gift of leadership, Aaron Cutler Coburn. After fourteen years, inspired by what Father Sill had done at Kent and with real interest in boys, he secured the backing of some well to do men and bought a farm three miles out of the city on which he opened this school which he named for David Wooster, a Revolutionary general of the neighborhood. Each boy has a responsible part in the maintenance and government of the school and, as at Kent, the rate of tuition varies with the financial standing of the parent.

Centering around the personality of Sarah Porter, a sister of President Porter of Yale, Miss Porter's School began in a small way. This remarkable woman gave her whole life to the school up to the time of her death in 1900 at the age of eighty-seven. Her fame as a teacher as it became more widely appreciated drew to her increasing numbers from which she selected the best material. "Her impress upon her long line of pupils was the result of her own unusual character. She gave to hundreds of the best born women of the land that poise and stability of character, that combination of learning and good manners, which is a mark of the noblest American womanhood." On Miss Porter's death her nephew, Robert Porter Keep, became trustee of the school, and after his death it continued under the able administration of Mrs. Keep, who had herself been a pupil of Miss Porter. Mrs. Keep died in the spring of 1917. The school continues under her son, for many years an instructor at Andover, and his wife.

Exclusively a college preparatory school, Rosemary Hall was founded by Dr Ruutz-Rees in Wallingford in 1890 and for ten years conducted there. Of English birth and education, Dr Ruutz-Rees has degrees from St. Andrew's as well as Columbia. Since 1883 she has lived in this country, of which she is a naturalized citizen Dr Lowndes had been long associated with her and was made head mistress in 1911. Margaret A Augur, who was made third head mistress in 1919, resigned in 1928 to become dean of the Bradford Academy Junior College The details of administration are now largely in the hands of two recently appointed assistant head mistresses, Una Lucas, M A, Cambridge University, and Mrs. Lawrence Shepard, A B, Smith. The intellectual and physical life of the school is robust and well supervised. To receive the school diploma a pupil must have passed examinations qualifying for Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Smith and other colleges. "Stress is laid upon games and sports no less than upon energy to work " Self-government established in 1896 operates through a representative committee chosen monthly by vote. For girls under fifteen a separate cottage under special supervision is provided. One of the earliest American cities to develop civic pride and with it a system of well laid out parks and substantial public buildings, Hartford has been the model and inspirer of many cities who have improved upon it. Hartford wears an air of complacent repose, but the vigor of its life pulsates in new extensions to the north and west and blossoms periodically in a beautiful bridge or a notable building. The city nervously listens to every fire alarm in the country and proudly hears the click of its typewriters from Calais to San Diego. When Mark Twain, Harriet Beecher Stowe and Charles Dudley Warner lived here, Hartford well maintained literary pretensions. Trinity College, started patriotically as Washington College in 1823, became Episcopal under its present name in 1845. At West Hartford, a residential suburb, is the Kingswood School.

The creation of Father Sill's own remarkable personality, Kent has become one of the great schools of the country. Begun in a farm house, simplicity of life, self reliance and directness of purpose have always dominated. Much of the community work is done by the boys, and this so called 'self help' plan has been widely copied by other schools, impressed by a system which enables a school to be run with small expense for servants. The religious life is actual and sincere. The school activities and outdoor life are varied. Its crews, accompanied each year to England by Father Sill, have recently brought renown to Kent. The pressure on Father Sill for admission has become onerous although the enrollment has been increased to nearly three hundred, a lusty offshoot has been established at South Kent, and scores of boys are yearly directed to other schools. Only the superior and earnest boy should seek admission. A six weeks summer session enrolls forty boys, some from Kent, many from other schools. See page 723.

Founded by Mrs. Maria H. Hotchkiss with a gift of $350,000, the school has from the first been intimately associated with Yale. Edward G. Coy, the first head master, a graduate of Yale, had served at the old Phillips Academy in Andover and brought with him to the newly founded school much of the atmosphere of Andover and even its terminology, still preserved in the titles of the classes (upper and lower middlers). The head master emeritus, Walter H. Buell, was a graduate of Yale, and the board of trustees and its presidents have usually been Yale men. Frederick S. Jones, president today, was for years Dean of Yale College. The graduates have generally shown preference for Yale, though in recent years the number entering other colleges has greatly increased and now a large delegation is sent yearly to Princeton and many enter Williams and Harvard and a few Amherst, Cornell and midwestern universities. It was Dr. Huber Gray Buehler, affectionately known as "The King" who gave the school its present sturdy character. Each year the King declared "there is only one rule in this school, Be a gentleman!" and the implications of this one rule cast a shade of responsibility over the previously unruffled brows of those lads from homes of wealth where pleasure dominated. Under Dr. Buehler's direction Hotchkiss became recognized as one of the foremost preparatory schools of the country. The life was one of tension and strenuousness, high striving and keen competition. The names of the head boys posted so conspicuously for the emulation of others were often chosen from the thirty or more scholarship boys who waited on table and who had been selected because of their superior intellect. In an ardent attempt at democracy these scholarship lads were sometimes laden with honors while they performed their humble tasks. Self discipline and self restraint under the watchful eye of master and masters make unnecessary any prefect system with its detailed and irritating supervision. In the past thirty years over two thousand pupils have been enrolled, about half of whom have come from New York and Connecticut. Mr. Van Santvoord, appointed head master in 1926, a Hotchkiss boy, a Rhodes scholar, came from a professorship in the University of Buffalo, and is carrying on cautiously.

This school is devoted to the instruction of boys from eight to fourteen, preparing them for college preparatory schools. It is administered by a board of trustees of which Lewis L. Delafield, Jr., of New York is president. Since 1929 it has occupied new buildings. In 1930 a bequest of $50,000 of William Amory Gardner of Groton was made the school, conditional on Mr. Riggs remaining in charge. Mr. Riggs prepared for Harvard at Groton. In 1915 he established the Riggs School at Lakeville.

to provide agricultural training for young boys, and later conducted here a tutoring school. A brother is founder and director of the Austen Riggs Foundation.

Westover is a country boarding school established and incorporated by Miss Hillard, with the assistance of wealthy friends who had confidence in her as a teacher. Trained in Miss Porter's School and from 1891 for eighteen years head mistress of St Margaret's in an adjoining town, on her establishment of Westover she took many of the students with her. She has been successful in creating a unified school spirit. The school offers a well rounded training for social requirements, but relatively few prepare for college. A real effort is made to develop appreciation for good music and literature, which is fostered by frequent concerts and lectures. The girls are encouraged to write and present plays and to enter into social welfare work. The religious ritual and atmosphere of Westover reflect the sentiments of the head mistress, which may be understood by reading her article "The Spirit of the School and Religion." Its purpose is the "maintenance of such loyalty" as "gives peace to the soul." The girls come from families of wealth and the school fosters a reputation for exclusiveness.

Leading citizens as early as 1846 originated a movement which culminated in the incorporation of this academy in 1854. The school differs in type from both the academies and high schools, between which it is historically a connecting link. As early as the closing years of the eighteenth century there had been an old-time private academy at Norwich. The movement to establish a free academy met with great opposition, for many at this time opposed free education beyond the elementary schools. The orators of the day, including Daniel Webster, were enlisted, and the agitation which resulted did much to further the development of the high school system, but in Norwich no high school was established. Though amply endowed the Free Academy makes a nominal charge to residents of the town and exacts a low tuition from non-residents. The school was early influenced by the Putnam School of Newburyport, no longer existing. Mr. Tirrell has been principal for many years.

This modern college preparatory school under Mr McOrmond's vigorous administration has attained foremost rank after a period of quiescence. Founded by William Lee Cushing, its inspiration lay in the ancient Uppingham School in Rutland, England, established 1584, and it has the basic ideals of this older school. For thirty years Mr Cushing successfully conducted the school, and sent many graduates to Harvard, Williams, Cornell and other colleges, though Yale influence has naturally predominated. On Mr Cushing's retirement in 1920 the headmastership was assumed by L. G. Pettee who was for many years a member of the faculty. In 1922 the school was purchased by Mr McOrmond, and reopened with a summer session in July, 1923. Mr McOrmond had been connected with the Choate School for fourteen years as head of the department of mathematics and director of athletics, and for seven years had maintained a summer tutoring school at Wallingford. The Lower School, under Frank Jordan Watson, has grown rapidly. A new and separate dormitory is planned. See page 711.

This school, with something of an English flavor, stands for thorough scholarship and all round development of its pupils. The Low-Heywood girl has poise and is able to enter and leave a room. Established by Mrs C E Richardson, an English-woman of wide educational experience, it was modeled after the best of the English private schools for girls. Louisa Low and her niece, Edith Heywood, took charge in 1883 and continued so far as practicable the policies and ideals of the founder. Under Miss Roper, long connected with the school as co-principal, and since Miss Heywood's death in 1927, head mistress, the college preparatory work has been strengthened. Miss Tilley, like her sister at Wykeham Rise, is a capable executive. The resident pupils come from leading families throughout the country, while the day department is well supported by the families of Stamford. See page 797.

This school today offers a broader cultural course than do most college preparatory schools, although college preparation is foremost and adequate. There is a closer contact between faculty and boys than is usual in most schools. Founded as the Connecticut Literary Institution nearly a century ago, loyal alumni in the past have contributed a limited endowment which has been doubled during the past few years. The present status of the school is due to the administrative capacity of Dr. Gage, who came to Suffield in 1924 after many years as head of the College of Yale in China. He is ably assisted by Mrs Gage, a physician. See page 708.

The atmosphere and ideals of the best New England homes have dominated The Choate School since its establishment. One of the most prosperous and successful of the younger New England preparatory schools, it has come into its fuller life during the able administration of Mr St John, head master since 1908, whose enthusiasm, good judgment, ready sympathy, and discrimination have been ably supplemented by Mrs St John's personal interest in maintaining the friendly, intimate atmosphere that characterized the school in its earlier days. Although all the courses of study are planned with college entrance in view, no rigid adherence to forms is insisted on and the student may take subjects chosen from different forms to suit his own needs. Interest in the individual boy and the purpose to give him what he, as an individual, needs, is the ideal that Mr St John holds up to his unusual corps of masters. The flexible system of forms, separate divisions for honor students, special opportunities in art, music and literature, orthopedic and physical examinations with an individual program corrective and athletic for each boy, and a close personal relationship between the school, the boy and his family are means to the accomplishment of this ideal. Effort is made to stimulate intellectual interests and to widen the mental horizon. See page 720.

The Taft School is the expression of the personality of the founder and head master, a brother of the late president and chief justice. Although he began life as a lawyer, teaching was evidently his foreordained vocation for we find him back at Yale, a tutor in Latin from '87 to '90. Dr Taft has proved himself a great head master. Himself a tremendous worker, he may be said to inspire his boys with industry rather than to exact it of them. There is no salvation for a boy at Taft except by hard work and any boy who survives the course of several years at The Taft School is sure to have a well trained mind Dr Taft sympathizes with the life of the boys on the playground as well as in the schoolroom and at once wins their comradeship and confidence by his geniality and large-heartedness A judicious amount of freedom is a part of his discipline in order that a boy's school life may properly grade into the greater freedom of after life The boys come from the substantial and well to do families throughout the country About half are from Connecticut and New York, and the middle west is strongly represented Yale influences and ideals are largely dominant The school is incorporated as a non-profit making corporation controlled by a self perpetuating board of trustees to whom Dr Taft has given the school unconditionally Through his lifetime of devotion, Dr Taft has endowed the school with his high ideals of work and scholarship A building fund of two million dollars completed in 1930, provides for an entire new plant and equipment. Loomis Institute had its origin in 1874 when five of the Loomis family drew up a charter and incorporated a school on what had been since 1639 the Loomis homestead. By 1912 accumulated funds of over two millions were available. Mr Batchelder, previously at Hackley and Hotchkiss, was appointed head master at that time. The school was opened by him in 1914 and has continued under his guiding hand, following the best traditions of New England preparatory schools. He plans for continued growth and increased endowment. The student body represents a democratic cross section of society, with a generous proportion of sons of ministers, doctors, educators, and other professional men. About half the boys take the academic course. The other half are distributed between scientific and business courses. Pupils share in the useful labor of the school, caring for their own rooms, the classrooms and the school grounds and athletic fields. The endowment makes possible a low rate of tuition and there are a number of scholarships. The student council plans and supervises student activities, affording a measure of self-government which cultivates a sense of responsibility. The original charter provides for agricultural courses and for girls, who are now segregated in the CHAFFEE SCHOOL across the river. Mrs Batchelder, who was Evelyn Longman, a sculptor of genius and renown, maintains her studio on the campus, not without beneficial influence on the boys. There is about the school evidence of an awareness of things of beauty and things doing in the world. See page 715.

Albany, rising on natural terraces from a maze of railway tracks that border the river, occupies a strategic position where the State Barge Canal and the Mohawk join the Hudson. Dominating all is the massive capitol building. Also on Capitol Hill are the pretentious State Education and State Office buildings. Once a notable center of old time Dutch patroon aristocracy, Albany is now a notable educational center with its New York State College for Teachers, Law School, Medical College, and College of Pharmacy directly in the city, while at Troy some six miles up the river are other important educational institutions. Of the three well known private schools in Albany, the Academy for Girls is still in the old downtown district. In 1930 construction of new buildings was started by the Academy for Boys in the New Scotland section, and by St. Agnes in Loudonville.

One of the few surviving old-fashioned academies, this is exclusively a college preparatory school maintaining highest standards of scholarship. It conservatively holds to teaching all boys Latin, mathematics and Greek, and ninety-five per cent in the last two decades have entered college. It has led every school in the U S seven times in the last twelve years and the average percentage of the students highest ratings over twelve years in these examinations is greater than any other school. A cadet battalion organized in 1870 is still continued. The atmosphere and spirit of the school as it exists today are the unique product of the heart and mind of Dr. Henry P. Warren, who at his death in 1919 had been its head master for over thirty years. Dr. McCormick, a master since 1912, has fully maintained old standards. The school has always served the old families of the city. The heavy patroon hand has been lifted, however, and today the trustees, prominent public spirited citizens, are putting the school plant on equality with the best country day schools.

Miss Maine's admiration of Ruskin accounts for the name of her school. Her staff are drawn largely from her alma mater. The pre-school department is under the supervision of the Child Education Foundation of New York and in this and the lower school the great proportion of the enrollment lies. Considerable latitude in selection of courses in the upper school appeals to the non-college girl.

Motor Route U.S. 20 from Syracuse, 16 from Aurora.

The second largest city of the state, Buffalo is an important port at the eastern end of Lake Erie and the entrance to the Erie canal. Niagara Falls, twenty-one miles north, supplies electric power for many industrial plants, among them the largest flour mill and grain elevator in the world. The University of Buffalo, the Albright Art Gallery, together with the schools below mentioned, and some huge Catholic schools, Mary Immaculate and Sacred Heart, are the principal educational and esthetic institutions. In Snyder, a residential suburb seven miles northeast, is The Park School of Buffalo.

Started as a cooperative school by a group of parents, The Franklin School was bought some years later by John Joseph Albright by whom it is still owned. Its first principal was William Nichols who had come from Boston in 1892 to establish the Nichols School. Miss Keyes was made principal in charge under him, and on his death in 1909 she was given complete charge and has developed the school along conservative lines. Primarily for girls, boys are taken in the first five grades and are prepared chiefly for Nichols. The school is now prosperous, its equipment, though simple, is good, and its college entrance and other scholastic records are high.

Good college preparation and a simple, wholesome life at moderate cost characterize the Carmel School for Girls on Lake Gleneida. It was founded in 1849 by the Methodist Episcopal Church and was for twenty-six years under the direction of Professor George Crosby Smith. Dr Wright, long a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, succeeded Clarence Paul McClelland in 1925 and under his leadership the school has developed and prospered. The curriculum is unusually comprehensive and the majority of the girls are prepared for college. See page 805.

In the Leatherstocking country made famous by James Fenimore Cooper, this historic town on Lake Otsego has something the appearance of a New England village. The county seat, and still favored by a number of wealthy New Yorkers who continue to maintain here their ancestral homesteads, Cooperstown prides itself on an atmosphere somewhat more cosmopolitan than neighboring communities. Four sons of Alfred Corning Clark, who made a fortune in the Singer Sewing Machines, have done much for the town. The great hospital was built by Alfred S., Stephen built the large brick Georgian building, in summer the O-te-sa-ga Hotel, and in winter, since 1920, the home of The Knox School. A monument to Dr Edward S Tibbits, rector until his death in 1930, and his father who devoted their lives and their fortunes to its maintenance, this was originally the local choir school of the parish, on the site of the Tibbits ancestral home. It was not until 1923 that the school was reorganized and reincorporated under a charter of the University of the State of New York. Regulated and influenced by the religious teachings of the Episcopal Church, Hoosac has its own traditions and customs. Most notable perhaps is the Yuletide festival which follows the old English order. This large and successful boarding school has an enviable patronage and is deservedly popular. Familiarly known as Millbrook from its location, The Bennett School offers sound academic training and specialized work in the arts and in vocational training. May F. Bennett, the founder and principal for thirty-three years, was a natural leader of girls and a woman of sensitive and penetrating personality and genuine spiritual power. After her death in 1924, the school was incorporated, in accordance with her will, under Miss Carroll.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL The four year course of general high school work has always prepared largely for the Upper School in which the majority of the girls are enrolled. In 1931, however, a small college preparatory group will be organized.

THE UPPER SCHOOL has six departments—Advanced Academic, Music, under the direction of Horace Middleton, planned for girls who are ready for specialized study, offering instruction in piano, singing, violin, harmony, counterpoint, and history of music, Fine Arts, with courses in drawing, painting, modeling, applied arts, interior decoration and costume design, Dramatic Arts, under the direction of Mr and Mrs. Charles Rann Kennedy (Edith Wynne Matthison), Household Arts, with two distinct lines. foods and cookery, and dressmaking and millinery; and a Secretarial Course. A very small post graduate group is accepted. See page 808.

Motor Route U.S. 1 from Stamford, Conn.

With its new skyline and its Mesopotamian ziggurats, New York is the modern Babylon, exceeding its prototype and all imitators in wealth and beauty It is the envy of the world, the cynosure of Europe, the metropolis of America, and the mecca of the spenders from the prosperous industrial cities and agricultural regions of the South and West The mad unceasing rush through its narrow canyons astound the stranger from abroad. Behind the plate glass windows of Fifth Avenue one sees the loot of centuries from every land Less than 30% of the population is Jewish, though it is the greatest Jewish city in the world and one-third of all American Semites live here. New Yorkers include half a million Russians and nearly as many Italians. The ethnic quotas in many cases exceed the population of the greatest cities of the countries from which they come.

Of its native sons, few of whom remain within its confines unless supported by the public purse or reaping the benefits of ancestral real estate investments, Al Smith is the best beloved. Most famous New Yorkers hail from Iowa or some place down in Tennessee or from the Russian borders.

On Morningside Heights, the acropolis of the new world, more than 38,000 students resort to Columbia University and its affiliated institutions, Teachers and Barnard Colleges. To the north the College of the City of New York has over 18,000, not all Jewish. On University Heights, across the Harlem, New York University, famous for its Hall of Fame, enrolls 33,101. Fordham, near Bronx Park, has 8534 Catholic students.

The museums of Art, Natural History, Indian Ethnology, and things Hispanic, house matchless and rapidly growing collections. The public library is notable for its architecture, its location, its collections, and its scores of branches. The priceless collection of the Morgan Library occupies a building architecturally perfect.

The private schools for boys serve chiefly the resident families. The girls boarding schools and residences offer the varied musical, dramatic, and other attractions of the metropolis to a geographically wider clientele. Most of them are within a half mile of the Plaza, some in the heart of the higher class residential section just east of Central Park, a few in the more cosmopolitan section west of the park toward Riverside Drive. The professional and vocational schools lie generally to the south, between Central Park and 42d Street. The private day schools, each in its own locality, serve their own special clientele. Some of them are exclusive, catering to a particular clique or set, for there are old families in New York who live conservatively.

As a matter of convenience the schools of Long Island, including Brooklyn, are treated as a group. Staten Island schools will be found listed under New York City.

Now a leading college preparatory school of the city, this was established by Samuel Brearley, a Harvard man who had studied at Oxford, for the purpose of providing a more substantial school for girls and more thorough preparation for college than the schools of the time offered At his death in 1886 the school was continued by its patrons and has since 1912 been administered by a board of trustees, the members of which are men and women prominent in New York educational and financial circles It is exclusively a day school, perhaps foremost among the college preparatory schools of New York, both in thoroughness and in the number of girls prepared for college From 1887 until his death in 1915 James G. Crosswell, Harvard '73, was head master An educator of the first rank, he maintained the highest educational standards The school has been continued under the successive leadership of Henry Dwight Sedgwick, Carl Van Doren, Sarah M. Dean, George Norton Northrop and Anne Dunn Miss Carey, formerly acting dean at Bryn Mawr, took charge in September, 1930

The Collegiate School is the oldest existing private secondary school in the United States, having a continuous history running back to the early settlement by the Dutch of Manhattan Island. For two hundred and fifty years it was maintained as a parish day school, but in 1887 it became a grammar school for both boys and girls, with a fixed tuition fee, in 1891 preparatory, and after 1894, for boys only. The school has moved progressively northward as the city has developed. Its standards of enrollment, clientele, and scholarship have always been high. The school is administered by a board of trustees but is sponsored and controlled by the Consistory of the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church. Arthur F. Warren, head master from 1910, was succeeded in 1930 by Mr. Boocock, for three years head of Troy Country Day School.

Founded as a preparatory school to Columbia College, it, too, has moved progressively uptown as the city has grown though it is no longer connected with the College. It rose to highest prominence in the middle of the nineteenth century under Dr Anthon, America's earliest classical scholar. The school at present is under the administration of Mr Alden and George Alexander Kohut, executive director. The clientele is largely Jewish. Formerly, the majority of its graduates entered Columbia though of recent years it has prepared for all the leading eastern colleges. An all day plan for supervised study and play was organized in 1930.

This school is exclusively for girls who have completed their secondary education and wish to take advanced work in various specialized courses in New York City and abroad. Established by Jessica Finch, now Mrs. Cosgrave, as a finishing and college preparatory school, her success led to the separation of the two departments and the establishment of the Lenox School as a preparatory school. One year of the two or three year course may be spent in the French School opened in Versailles in 1926 and now conducted in Paris. Mrs. Cosgrave, who is reaching a constantly wider circle through her sane and wholesome articles to parents on adolescent girls, has through her sincere and forceful personality created here a unique atmosphere and type of education for older girls. Riverdale was established to capitalize in a vigorous way the value of a country environment for city boys Although the city has now grown out to the school, the campus adjoins the vast open spaces of Van Cortlandt Park From the first, Riverdale has concentrated on college preparatory work and has achieved an unusually high record of success. There is a large day school enrollment and the majority of the boys in residence are on a five day plan The enrollment of the Riverdale School of Music is not confined to pupils in the boys school Mr. Hackett, sincerely religious, succeeds in inculcating in many of his pupils an attitude of worship The staff contains some unusually strong men devoted to Mr Hackett and the school. In its curriculum and general atmosphere, the school displays unusual breadth. The entire plant, valued at over a million dollars, was turned over to a board of trustees in 1925 by Mr Hackett, who continues as head master and who has since 1912 maintained an Adirondack camp, Riverdale See page 725.

BROOKLYN, N.Y. Alt 45 ft.

Formerly an independent municipality, this is now the largest borough of New York City, both in population and in area. It is a city of varied manufactures and is also the great middle class residential suburb of the metropolis with which it is connected by huge bridges, tunnels and ferries.

The private schools serve chiefly the local residents of the borough. On Brooklyn Heights, the old aristocratic section, is the Seminary of the same name. Two of the older schools, Packer and Friends, are in the vicinity of Borough Hall, and a mile east are Pratt Institute and Adelphi Academy. Overlooking Prospect Park Plaza are Berkeley Institute and the Ethical Culture School. Nearby is the Museum of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences To the east, in Flatbush, a new residential section, once largely Dutch farmers gardens, is the Flatbush School To the north, near the Children's Museum, is Froebel Academy. In Dyker Heights, along the southeast shore, Polytechnic Preparatory School and Shore Road Academy overlook The Narrows Long the leading secondary school for girls of Brooklyn, Packer has recently developed a well organized junior college which offers work accepted by some eastern colleges for women. Throughout its long history the school has played an important part in education in Brooklyn. Named in honor of William S. Packer whose widow gave money for the new building, it occupies the site of the Brooklyn Female Academy organized by public spirited citizens in 1845. The scholastic standard is high in all departments. Four principals have directed the policy of the school. On the retirement of E. J. Goodwin in 1918, Dr. Denbigh took charge.

One of the outstanding country day schools in the east, directed by an ardent apostle of the movement who was for seven years president of the Country Day Conference, this is an outgrowth of the preparatory department of Polytechnic Institute. More than half a million dollars went into the new school plant which is perhaps unequaled for its purpose. The memorial chapel, dedicated to the boys who lost their lives in the war, cost over $100,000; and $175,000 in 1930 went into a model gymnasium. Unlike many boys day schools, the majority of "Poly" boys complete their preparation for college here. In the past five years over three hundred graduates have entered some score of colleges. This school was established by the Stony Brook Assembly to give thorough college preparation together with an attempt to correlate with the academic work evangelical Christianity. The faculty is chosen with the same end in mind, that religion in the school may become neither pietism nor mere formalism. Three hours a week are devoted to Bible study. A "Morning Watch," the "Fellowship," and voluntary deputations of student speakers to churches give the boy an opportunity for spontaneous expression of his religious life. The Rev Dr John F Carson, former moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, was the founder and first president. On his death in 1927 he was succeeded by Hugh R. Monro. Mr. Gaebelein's influence on the boys is traceable to his sincerity and forcefulness. A $500,000 campaign is under way to provide new buildings, increased acreage, and a permanent scholarship fund. The plan of spending the winter months in Florida was conceived and first carried out by Paul C. Ransom, the founder of this school. For six preceding winters he had taken a group of boys to Pine Knot Camp, the present winter home of the school five miles south of Miami. After his death in 1907, Mrs. Ransom and Levings Hooker Somers developed the school on the lines laid down by Mr. Ransom. The group never exceeds twenty-five carefully selected boys. The income is wholly invested in improvement of the equipment. An atmosphere of sincerity, loyalty, serious work and devotion to ideals has been created which leaves an indelible impress. Some evidence of this was shown in the immediate and cordial response of alumni in subscriptions to reconstruct the Coconut Grove plant after its practical destruction in the 1926 hurricane. In 1928 a board of trustees was appointed and the school was incorporated the following year. In 1931, Mr. Somers, who had married the previous year, resigned and Mr. Wilson, an alumnus, instructor in the school from 1926 to 1930, who had recreated the summer camp, Meenagha Lodge, in 1927, was called from Lawrenceville to succeed him.

This smoothly running institution, highly endowed, perfectly equipped, well organized, capably administered, enrolls girls from conservative families in all parts of the country. The school was founded over a century ago at Middlebury, Vermont, by Emma Willard, a pioneer in education. In 1819 an offer of financial assistance drew the school to New York and in 1821, on an invitation from Troy, it became known as the Troy Female Seminary. In the next fifty years of its existence more than fifteen thousand young women were enrolled, many of them becoming school mistresses and directors who carried the influence of the school far and wide. Among these Mrs Russell Sage, a member of the class of '48, was later a teacher in the school. In 1892 the school was reorganized under its present name. The gift of a million from Mrs Sage made possible the architecturally beautiful home which the school has occupied since 1910. Miss Kellas was president of both Russell Sage College and the Emma Willard School from 1916 to 1928, but now devotes her entire time to the school. See page 806.

This school is the successor of the Utica Female Academy and gained its foremost place in progressive education under the leadership of Frank R. Page, the first head master, in charge until 1928. Mr. Bixby had had wide experience in various types of schools from elementary grades through college. Under his guidance a small boarding department for boys was started in 1930. A. Verne MacCullough, a man of wide experience in camp and school work, is principal. See page 851.

From a community venture, Roger Ascham School has developed into a successful college preparatory and elementary school and has the support of substantial families of the neighborhood. The school has no ambition to be known as exclusively progressive, though many of the practices of the so-called progressive schools are followed. It was established by Mrs. Allen, whose sister founded the Winsor School in Boston, and brother the Middlesex School, Concord. Mr. Johnson came to the school in 1927 after seven years at Blake School, Minneapolis.

The Lawrenceville School, on the John C. Green Foundation, was chartered in 1881, a reorganization of an earlier school established by Isaac Brown, a Presbyterian clergyman. From 1830 to 1878 under the management of the Revs. Samuel and Hugh Hamill, it prospered as the Lawrenceville Classical and Commercial High School and during that time enrolled 2500 pupils. John C. Green, who had been one of the original pupils, amassed a fortune in the China trade, and having left it without restrictions, his executors determined upon the establishment of an endowed preparatory school for boys. They purchased the Lawrenceville School and Dr. James Cameron Mackenzie organized the new school in 1884.

Dr. Mackenzie proved himself an organizer of no ordinary ability and gave to Lawrenceville its present characteristic policy. During his administration and that of Charles Ewing Green, the sole surviving residuary legatee and President of the Board of Trustees, the school greatly prospered. Dr. Mackenzie introduced the English "house" system, then a novel feature in American schools, which has since been widely copied by other American private schools. The boys below the upper form occupy separate houses, each presided over by a master and his wife, assisted by one or two unmarried masters. Every house is a home unit, and there are inter-house instead of inter-class contests in athletics. The effect of this system has been to preserve and foster individuality. In the "Upper House," for the fifth form, the discipline is largely in the hands of the boys, in order that they may the better prepare themselves for the greater freedom of college life.

During the regime of Rev. Simon John McPherson from 1899 to 1919, Lawrenceville developed characteristic practices and customs similar to those of the great English public schools. The picturesque side of this life with its local vocabulary and time honored customs has been vividly depicted in the stories of Owen Johnson.

Dr. Abbott, elected head master on the death of Dr. McPherson by the trustees after a thorough canvass, is a graduate of King's College, Nova Scotia, and of Worcester College, Oxford, England. He was a master in Groton from 1897 to 1916, and professor of Latin in Yale from 1916 to 1919. His broad vision, human sympathies, virile personality and courage have won the enthusiastic support and confidence of faculty and alumni. A system of health supervision in operation since 1922 has proved most effective as a preventive measure. In connection with it an infirmary, probably the most complete in any school, was opened in 1929.

Lawrenceville is today one of the largest of the popular preparatory schools, and is national in its patronage. The school, though non-sectarian, has Presbyterian traditions, which, together with proximity, incline forty per cent of the students to choose Princeton as their university. Financial aid is extended to a few boys whose names are not divulged. See page 742.

The oldest boarding school for girls in America, this seminary was founded by the Countess Benigna, daughter of Count Zinzendorf of Saxony, and since 1743 has been continuously maintained at Bethlehem. Around old Colonial Hall, erected in 1748, cluster memories of the French and Indian Wars and during the Revolution it served as a military hospital, sheltering thousands of wounded Revolutionary heroes. Among its pupils were Eleanor Lee, a grandniece of Washington, Chancellor Livingston's daughter, Cornelia, the wife of Robert Fulton, two daughters of Nathaniel Greene and others representing the old Colonial families, Dutch, German, Quaker, French and English. Loyal alumnæ continue to dower their ancient institution with gifts. Since 1912 work of college grade has been undertaken and the title of the institution added to. The great majority of the girls come from Pennsylvania, though sixteen states are represented. Dr Heath came to the school in 1926 after twelve years at Salem Academy and College, North Carolina.

Once the preparatory department of Wilson College, this was established as a separate school in 1906. It still provides for college preparation, but also maintains general high school courses. The accredited Junior College was established in 1927 and its courses, as are those in the Conservatory of Music, are of college grade. Excursions to Washington and other points of interest are made a feature. During the month of May each year the entire school is transferred to Ocean City where the Hotel Flanders, fronting directly on the beach, is leased and the school work is carried on as usual. Mr. Magill, who has been the head master since 1910, is also secretary and treasurer of the Board of Directors. See page 815.

This human, intimate, and friendly institution is perhaps the largest and deservedly one of the most prosperous of the boarding schools maintained by Friends for both boys and girls. This is in no small part due to the winning personality of Mr. Walton, principal since 1912, and the success that he and his staff have had in eliciting the cooperation of members of the Society of Friends, and in enrolling a considerable proportion of students of other denominations The Quaker way of life characterized by "self control, sympathy, moderation, deliberation, inward peace, and faith in the power of God," is impressed upon the students The school was established and endowed in accordance with the will of John M George, providing for the education of the children of Friends and others It is managed by Friends but there are no denominational restrictions Recent graduates are now in over fifty colleges and universities See page 855.

Mercersburg is one of the great college preparatory schools of national patronage Nearly a century in existence, it was merely a local academy when William Mann Irvine took it over in 1893 Dr Irvine, a Princeton graduate, rebuilt the school keeping in mind as a model Exeter, from which he had graduated He incorporated also some of the features of the English schools which he had studied The school today is the result of the broad vision, shrewd business sense and genius for publicity, and indefatigable energy of Dr Irvine; but his work was ably supplemented by loyal alumni, efficient faculty, staunch friends and a Board of Regents with great faith, liberal gifts and trust in the institution and its management

Dr Edwards was called to Mercersburg in 1928 on the death of Dr Irvine, after six years as head master of The Hill School A graduate of Phillips Andover, of Williams, and the Union Theological Seminary, he came to Mercersburg as an old friend, for in his previous pastoral work he had been visiting minister to the school for almost a quarter of a century He had been a close personal friend of Dr Irvine's and brought to Mercersburg a personal knowledge of the school's problems and appreciation for the ideals and traditions of the Academy, together with wide acquaintance with leading educators, and several years service as trustee of Williams and Mount Holyoke Colleges

During recent years Mercersburg has been sending approximately a hundred seventy-five boys to college each year—one hundred graduates and about seventy-five who enter college although classified as third year boys Nearly two hundred take College Board examinations annually A large number enter Princeton although a hundred sixteen colleges and universities in this and other countries have enrolled boys from this school Mercersburg boys stand out in the college crowd scholastically and in the various activities Recently they have been passing between ninety-five and one hundred per cent of all examinations taken in their freshman year at college The rugged vitality of the school and its intensely democratic atmosphere bear fruit in after years—in Olympic games, in the World War, in college athletics, Mercersburg boys have made enviable records In one year, at Princeton, they captained eight of the varsity teams Seventy ambitious boys are annually on working scholarships

The school now has approximately $3,000,000 invested in material equipment Especially outstanding are the new Main Hall, Assembly Hall, Administration Building and new Gothic Chapel, designed by Cram, with its carillon of forty-three bells upon which two recitals are given weekly See page 743.

With Mr Washburn in the ownership and direction of this school are associated Julian Langson Lathrop, Laurie York Erskine, and Robert Wallace Shaw. These four men established the school to carry out principles of education which they felt were not to be found in schools then in existence,—adequate preparation for college, with particular emphasis on the fostering of individual responsibility and personal liberty. The boys enrolled come largely from Pennsylvania. See page 745.

Boys come to this prosperous school not only from Pennsylvania but from adjacent states. Since its reorganization by the Schwenkfelder Church with Dr Kriebel as principal, Perkiomen has grown steadily. Four out of five of its graduates have entered higher institutions of learning, including the leading colleges and universities. The school does commendable work in helping young people of limited means to an education. The Junior School has a separate faculty, classrooms and extra-curricular activities. See page 745.

PHILADELPHIA, PA. Pop 1,823,779 (1920) 1,950,961 (1930).

The "City of Brotherly Love," laid out in squares by William Penn, is now the third largest city in the United States. At the crossing of the principal thoroughfares, Broad and Market Streets, stands the City Hall, a political monument of a former generation. About Independence Square center the pre-Revolutionary landmarks — Independence Hall, with the sacred cracked Liberty Bell, and Carpenters Hall, where met the First Colonial Congress.

Its lawyers and its capons, its scrapple, its pepper pot, its political machines, its spasmodic reforms, Baldwin locomotives, Stetson hats, Disston saws, and the Curtis Cultural Publications, have all made the Quaker City famous.

North of Market Street are Girard College and Temple University, the latter largely the creation of the late Russell H. Conwell, famous as the man whose address "Acres of Diamonds" was perhaps delivered more times to more people than any other speech. Southwest of the City Hall about Rittenhouse Square the old aristocratic mansions are fast giving way to shops and apartment houses. At West Philadelphia, across the Schuylkill from Philadelphia, are Drexel Institute and the University of Pennsylvania which latter now enrolls about 8000 students, its hundred acre campus adjoining manufacturing and faded residential districts.

To a greater extent than in any other large city, wealthier residents have abandoned their town houses and migrated to the suburbs. Private schools have naturally followed and many are found in the attractive suburban sections of the city itself. Overbrook, to the northwest, lies partly in Philadelphia and partly in Merion. Germantown, largest of the suburban districts, is seven miles northwest of the City Hall. Here are many fine old pre-Revolutionary houses. Chestnut Hill, most beautiful of the outlying parts of Philadelphia, stretching along the wooded slopes of the valley of the Wissahickon Creek, is four miles north of Germantown. Oak Lane, east of Chestnut Hill, lies at the northern edge of the city and has attracted various day schools.

The schools in the farther suburbs are treated under their own towns. Along the Main Line, one of the most beautiful series of suburbs in the country, well known schools, including many for defectives as well as for Bryn Mawr preparation, will be found at Wynnewood, Ardmore, Haverford, Bryn Mawr, Devon, Berwyn, Paoli and Malvern. North of the city, among the Montgomery county hills, there are private schools in Rydal, Meadowbrook, Bryn Athyn, and Ambler. In the outlying southern districts, private schools are found at West Chester, Chester, Swarthmore, and Lansdowne.

This school owes its origin to a group of parents and educators interested in progressive education. Under Francis Mitchell Froelicher, Oak Lane was affiliated with the University of Pennsylvania as a school of observation and experiment for its School of Education. William B. Curry succeeded Mr. Froelicher in 1927, after a year on the faculty of Oak Lane. He came from Bedales, the outstanding progressive school of England, and introduced many of the methods successfully worked out there. Mr. Curry resigned in 1931 to return to England as director of Dartington Hall. A resident department for twenty boys from the sixth grade through high school was opened in 1928 for full time or five day boarding. Boys are under the immediate supervision of a special house master and house-mother. See page 856.

William Penn gave this school, one of the oldest and largest in the country, three charters, the first in 1701 of the same date (October 25, 1701) as the Charter of Philadelphia, the second in 1708 and the third and final one in 1711 It is still conducted under the Charter of 1711 which provided for "the good education of youth and their early instruction in the principles of true religion and virtue, qualifying them to serve their country and themselves, by breeding them in reading, writing and learning of languages and useful arts and sciences " For the first few years the school was under the joint control of the Meeting and the Board, but this plan of conducting the school proving unsatisfactory, Penn, then in England, determined to place the management of the school upon an independent basis under the sole control of a self perpetuating body of fifteen Hence the 1711 Charter.

Long under the dominating personality of Dr Richard Mott Jones, head master for forty-four years, the school prospered and Dr. Jones attained a national reputation as one of America's foremost head masters. On his death in 1917 the graduates numbered thirteen hundred, of whom more than a thousand had continued their studies in colleges and universities

Since 1918 the school has been under the able direction of Dr. Gummere For many years head of the Latin Department of Haverford College and a member of the board of overseers of the school, he is, himself, a classical scholar and the author of many school textbooks. Dr Gummere's administration has resulted in the development of the school in numbers and influence, and to his leadership may be attributed the new plant to which the school moved in 1925. In the upper school a system has been initiated whereby under the guidance of instructors each boy may elect and concentrate in some field in which he does work beyond college entrance requirements Initiative on the part of the masters is encouraged and latitude in selection of material and method is allowed. A number of men formerly under Dr Gummere are now heads of modern country day schools, and more members of the Headmasters Association have served in this school than in any other See page 749.

Patronized by leading families of the city, Shady Side is a prosperous and growing preparatory school for boys. It had its inception in a private school established as early as 1883 in Allegheny by the late Dr W R Crabbe. Two years later the school was transferred to a more central location in Shady Side. Its patrons, prominent citizens, have always taken a keen interest in the school. Mr Nomer, formerly a master at Lawrenceville, was appointed in 1919. Through a gift of Mrs W H. This school, long regarded by its own discriminating clientele as the best preparatory school, has perhaps grown too large to justify the superlative. Founded by the Rev Matthew Meigs, the story of how his son, John, coming to the school in 1876, at the age of twenty-four, in the following thirty-five years brought the school from an obscure venture starting with two teachers and twenty boys to an institution of forty masters and three hundred seventy-five boys, has been interestingly told by his biographer, Dr. W. Russell Bowie, in "The Master of the Hill." John Meigs was a genius for organization, with abounding vitality and a passionate zest for life, with extraordinary power over his fellow men. He deliberately put from him thoughts of material achievement and gave himself not to the bending or breaking, but to the making of men. Actuated by the highest ideals, with striking ability he surmounted the greatest difficulties in managing and financing. Twice within six years his school was burned and it was ravaged by typhoid and pneumonia, but his determination never faltered in misfortune. His fidelity to his ideals of education and character building inflexibly withstood the influences of the wealth and social position of his patrons Mrs. John Meigs, familiarly known as "Mrs John," played a great part in the futures of many men by her inspiring counsel in the "sky parlor"

"Mr Rolfe of The Hill" is the title of a little book compiled by Dr Boyd Edwards from the inspiring writings of Dr. Alfred G Rolfe, who directed the school after Dr. Meigs death in 1911 until Dwight R. Meigs, then in Oxford University, was ready to take his father's place In 1914 the son entered upon his duties as head master and at once gave evidence that he had inherited his father's administrative genius In 1920 the Alumni, recognizing the worth of the school and the present trend in educational institutions from private ownership to endowed corporate organizations, took over the control. Dwight R. Meigs resigned in 1922, and Dr Boyd Edwards, formerly pastor of the Hillside Presbyterian Church, Orange, N. J., an old friend of the school and the Meigs family, became fifth head master Early in 1928 Mr. Wendell, the dean of administration, popular with faculty and students, was made acting head master and later was given full charge. Under him The Hill continues to progress Provision has been made to give constructive work to those boys found not to be college material. The new Hobbies Building affords opportunities for many interests and sustained activities

Much of the management of the school has been put upon the faculty through the formation of four committees on discipline, administration, curriculum and extra-curriculum activities. Student self-government has been promoted through the formation of a School Council Standards of work have always been high and it is a matter of record that few Hill graduates have failed to pass their college examinations. They have been unusually successful, too, among college undergraduates. Hill is proud of her boys and the families from which they come Hill boys are proud of their school, too, and all applicants for admission must furnish references to or endorsement by alumni or their parents Their loyalty is shown by large gifts, — the two million dollar campaign conducted during 1929 and 1930 having been oversubscribed by $150,000. This well known finishing school for young ladies grew out of The Chestnut Street Seminary, founded as early as 1850, which moved from Philadelphia to Ogontz, where it occupied the estate of the Civil War financier, Jay Cooke. It has since been known as the Ogontz School, and retains its post office address of Ogontz, although moved in 1917 to handsome new buildings in Rydal. Miss Sutherland has been principal since 1908 and under her direction the school has prospered. Emphasis is placed on social and family life and the study of art, literature, psychology, ethics and home making as well as college preparation. A summer camp, the Ogontz White Mountain Camp, is near Lisbon, N H.

THE RYDAL SCHOOL, established in 1917, is the junior school of Ogontz. In 1927 it occupied new buildings on the estate and continues to have the advantages of the upper school faculty in addition to its own well trained lower grade teachers. Day pupils are received.

MARYLAND

Baltimore has distinctive local color, customs and cuisine. Famous for its markets, its good living, its terrapin, it is one of the principal seaports in the country. Moreover, it is the city of Poe's Raven, The Star Spangled Banner, and H L Mencken, America's most strident boobiphobe.

Centering about Mount Vernon Place, from which rises the tall Washington Monument, are the Peabody Institute, where the Peabody Conservatory of Music has its headquarters, and the Walters Picture Gallery. Between Mount Vernon Place and Mount Royal Avenue are a number of private schools. Eutaw Place leads through the residential section to Druid Hill Park, about which is another group of schools. In Roland Park, still farther north, is the new site of Johns Hopkins University, established in 1876 and enrolling over 4500 students. In this suburb also are the Gilman, and Roland Park Country Schools, Girls Latin, and Notre Dame of Maryland. Greenwood School is in Ruxton, farther out. In Mt Washington are Mount Saint Agnes School for girls and Mount Washington Country School for boys.

The first established country day school, a notable development in American education, Gilman owes its start to Mrs Francis K. Carey, who formed a committee which in 1897 incorporated "The Country School for Boys of Baltimore City." In 1911, renamed in honor of the former president of Johns Hopkins, the school moved to a more spacious site at Roland Park. The five day boarding plan, here first adopted, permits boys to return to their families for the weekends. As the boarding department has developed the school has appealed to a wider clientele. During the administration of Frank Woodworth Pine, it attained high scholastic standing, and under the direction of Mr Morrow, who succeeded L. Wardlaw Miles in 1926, it has had steady growth. The Lower School is separately organized.

One of the most exclusive girls schools in the country, with the patronage of conservative families of New York, Philadelphia and the south, this school, frequently known as "Catonsville," was established as a boarding and day school by the Misses Carter who surrendered it in 1912 to the principal now in charge Recently the day department was discontinued together with the pre-high school grades. The atmosphere of the school is simple and the girls give evidence of breeding The applications are always in excess of the accommodations and reservations must be made several years in advance.

Tome was chartered as The Jacob Tome Institute. For three-quarters of a century Jacob Tome had been a resident of Port Deposit and had acquired a great fortune in business and banking. On his death in 1898 he left an endowment of two and three-quarters million dollars. His intention was that the Institute should offer complete instruction from kindergarten through high school for both boys and girls. In 1898 the trustees decided to develop, in addition to the local schools, a boarding school for boys. A beautiful site was purchased and with the assistance of the best architects and landscape and sanitary engineers the trustees expended a million and a half in carrying out their plans.

Dr J C Mackenzie, who had organized Lawrenceville, served for two years as director. In the modified house system, the younger boys have their own home and each boy his individual room. The curriculum is unusually rich for a secondary school. The proportion of one instructor to eight boys makes possible a high degree of individual instruction and an unusual thoroughness of scholastic work. After ten years as head master, Dr. Thomas S Baker resigned and in 1919 was succeeded by Dr Brush, who had previously been a member of the board of trustees and who resigned as dean of the college faculty of the Johns Hopkins University to take charge of the school. The first church boarding school of the English type in America, St. James is the diocesan school of Maryland. Dr. William Augustus Muhlenberg, who had first introduced the English Episcopal school system at Flushing, L. I., sent his chief assistant, Rev. J. B. Kerfoot, to be the first head master, and here, too, another pupil of Muhlenberg's, Dr Henry Augustus Coit, taught until he was called to organize St Paul's at Concord, N H In 1844 the school was chartered as the "College of St James" Closed during the war, it reopened in 1869 under Henry Onderdonk, who continued as head master until 1896 In 1903 he was succeeded by his son, the present head master, and the name was changed to St James School Mr Onderdonk is a strong and lovable personality, a great teacher and a hero to his boys The personnel is of the best and "home life" and "individual attention" and the "honor system" in this school are not empty phrases After the fire in 1926, an appeal to the alumni resulted in the raising of funds not only for a new fireproof building greatly superior to the one destroyed, but for Laidlaw Memorial Infirmary See page 752.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D.C. Alt 25 ft. Pop 486,869 (1930).

During the season this is the haunt of big game which attract powerful insects, only vermin, and queer birds from Wall Street, Main Street, and prohibition headquarters. Not all the battles are legislative. Some of the most brilliant victories are won by a Gann or a Grundy in ball or committee room. Few call it home except the minor or permanent government officials and employees. The capital of a great democracy, its citizens have no vote and take no part in its government. Even the details of the public school system are managed by the more than four hundred representatives and the ninety-six senators from the forty-eight states. Located and surveyed by Washington in the wilderness, the extended vistas of the city today were planned by the French officer, L'Enfant, influenced by Versailles. The architecture of the great national buildings reflects the degraded tastes of the various periods from which they date. The cast iron dome of the Capitol makes an impressive photograph on a wet night. The setting of the White House adds to its attractiveness. Recently, well ordered attempts have been made to beautify the city — Potomac Park with its Japanese cherries, and the Speedway along the river. The erection of the new railroad station, by Burnham, in Roosevelt's time, marked the turn in architectural taste. The Lincoln Memorial, with its great display of Doric columns reflected in the water, stands almost in the shadow of the great white obelisk. Still more recently new elements of beauty have been introduced, the Pan American Union is stimulating and refreshing in its architectural detail and arrangement, and the new building of the Academy of Arts and Sciences by Bertram Goodhue is a remarkable example of purest Greek architectural design.

Washington is the headquarters of many notable working scientists. Its museums and collections are of growing importance. The Freer is a gem. Saint Gaudens' Grief, in Rock Creek Cemetery, was to Galsworthy the most memorable thing in Washington and perhaps in America.

The attractions of Washington have made it an educational center. The Catholic Church, with characteristic foresight, has taken advantage of this for its higher institutions of learning — the Catholic University, Trinity College and Georgetown University. George Washington University falls short of the hope and plan of the Father of his Country.

Recent trade invasion of the older residential region from Lafayette Square to Dupont and Thomas Circles has driven the costly new mansions and legations to Sixteenth Street, where they extend for miles to the north. Finishing schools have flourished on this soil and some still remain in the neighborhood of Dupont Circle. The more substantial college preparatory schools are rapidly deserting this region for the hills north and west of the city. Some schools have crossed the line and have such post office addresses as Forest Glen, Garrett Park and Takoma Park, Maryland. The Chevy Chase Schools, although over the Maryland border, use the Washington post office. The Madeira School, long on 19th Street, moves in the summer of 1931 to its new plant across the Potomac in Greenway, Fairfax County, Va., thirty minutes ride from the city.

In the fall of 1927 the advanced classes were organized as a junior college, the three year high school still retaining its college preparatory function. The girls in a friendly atmosphere are given opportunity to make intelligent use of the educational and cultural advantages of Washington. Since the death of Dr Farrington in 1930, his widow, Mrs Isabelle Scudder Farrington, has developed his policies and has enlarged the scope of the school. Amentdale has become a place of pilgrimage for Congressmen and friends who gasp in awe and admiration. The grounds and buildings are decorated with expensive objets d'art from the ateliers of dealers on the Via Tornabuoni and the Via Sistina, patronized by wealthy Americans. 'A girl's club is her castle' and there are some Greek letter sororities, Japanese, Swiss, Mission clubhouses where the girls entertain their friends. The school was established by Mr and Mrs John Irving Cassedy, principals of a seminary in Norfolk. Its charter was issued by the State of Maryland in 1903. In 1916 Mr Cassedy transferred his interest to Joe Clifton Trees and Dr Ament, the latter formerly president of the State Normal School at Indiana, Pa. A small preparatory department is maintained. Much of the education is 'outside of text books' and there is opportunity for the greatest variety of educational divertissement.

The boys in this school come largely from the better class families in the southern states. It was established by Robert S Walker and was taken over by a board of trustees on his death in 1914. The present head master is a son of the founder and a former president of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States. He has done much to raise the standards of secondary instruction in the south. The equipment for academic and extra-curricular activities is modern, attractive and complete. The discipline and instruction are founded on the highest principles. Written examinations for admission are required and the practices, ideals and standards are on a plane with those of northern schools.

Established to equal the best northern preparatory schools in standards, in a climate affording every opportunity for vigorous outdoor life, Asheville School enrolls boys largely from the northern states and prepares them for the leading colleges and universities. Newton M Anderson and Charles A Mitchell, the founders, had previously organized the University School in Cleveland. The school was purchased in 1926 by Walter P. Fraser of Pittsburgh, with evangelical intent In 1927 he chose Mr Bement as head master. In 1930 the alumni and Mr

Bement formed a new corporation which took over the school and put it on a permanent basis. Mr. Bement came from The Hill School and has reorganized the school on the principle that "the only real appeal to the boy is the appeal of interest." The curriculum has been enriched by the addition of the teaching of some branch of natural science in each grade, a study of music appreciation and of art, and a graduate course in manual arts. A sane, reasonable religious life is fostered. See page 760.

Charleston retains much of the atmosphere of ante-bellum days and is noted for its beautiful old houses and charming gardens. Here the Civil War was opened by a shot from a battery on Morris Island against the Union Troops at Fort Sumter. It is the largest city in the state, an important seaport and one of the leading southern centers for cotton manufacturing. Adjacent to Hampton Park, on the banks of the Ashley river, is The Citadel, the military college of South Carolina. On Radcliffe Street between Rutledge Avenue and Smith Street, Ashley Hall is near the river.

Periods of prosperity and depression have had less effect on Miss Harris' School than perhaps any other in Florida. The growth of the school has been steady, and in 1922 new and larger quarters on the bay supplanted the original buildings. A separate boys department under its own head master was organized in 1931. Tourist pupils in winter months are kept up to grade by use of their home textbooks. Outdoor study is a feature. The faculty are all graduates of northern colleges and adequate college preparation is available. See page 829.

Established by Colonel Williams as the Coral Gables Military Academy, the present name was taken in 1930. Plans for a reorganization and a new plant have been somewhat held up due to business depression, but the school has held its own where others have gone under. Tourist pupils are accepted in the day and boarding departments and are kept up to grade by use of their home textbooks. See page 761.

A diocesan school established by Bishop William C Gray, Cathedral School has been rejuvenated under Mrs Stoddard, former head teacher of St Timothy's in Catonsville, who was made principal in 1928. Despite hard times, new buildings have been erected and an entirely new plant is projected. The patronage of both boarding and day departments is largely from families spending their winters in Florida. An increasing number of girls are prepared for college.

Lying between the ocean and Lake Worth, Palm Beach, one of the older fashionable winter resorts in America, owes its origin to the late Henry M. Flagler, creator of the Florida East Coast. Since the devastating fire some years ago, the resort has been extensively developed. Here are enormous hotels, magnificent estates and exclusive clubs. The girls of The Palm Beach Schools are on Cocoanut Row, the boys on Chilean Ave.

Louisville, the largest city in the state and the greatest leaf tobacco market in the world, has varied manufactures. An atmosphere of the old south has been preserved by the citizens who are proud of the high percentage of native born. Here George Rogers Clark, the frontiersman of the 18th century, built a small fort. The town was later named in honor of Louis XVI of France. As an educational center it is today the seat of the University of Louisville. The Kentucky Home School for Girls overlooks Cherokee Park.

This school was formed by the union of Ward Seminary and Belmont College, under the charter name The Ward-Belmont School. The former institution was founded in 1865 and the latter in 1890. At that time they had a joint enrollment of seven hundred and fifty from all the southern states with a predominance from Tennessee. Dr. Blanton, for twenty-one years president of Ward Seminary, is still in nominal control, but the actual management of affairs has passed to Dr. Barton and A. B. Benedict who now own the controlling interest. The entire faculty is college trained. Although there is a standard preparatory school course, more than half the students are enrolled in the accredited Junior College. Over eighty per cent of the high school graduates enter college and two-thirds of the junior college graduates annually enter four year colleges as juniors. The resident students, though largely from the south and middle west, represent thirty-six states. See page 828.

Mrs Johnson developed this school out of her direction of the children of her own household. She stresses natural growth as opposed to informational education. A full account of the school is given in Dewey's "Schools of Tomorrow." A Fairhope Educational Foundation has been organized to promote the interests of and to support this school. This original demonstration school has attracted widespread attention, and a number of others have been elsewhere established under Mrs. Johnson's inspiration or direction. There is a special six weeks winter school at Fairhope in February and March for fathers, mothers, teachers and social workers which touches on the methods of education, arts and crafts, folk dancing and singing, and nature study. A summer school on similar lines is conducted in Greenwich, Conn., in the plant of the Edgewood School.

Extending fourteen miles along the Ohio river, Cincinnati was originally laid out in checkerboard. The local freestone and blue limestone predominate as building materials. The Ohio river has influenced the growth of many industries. To the German population, which settled here in the middle of the 19th century, is due much of the cultural development of the city. Its orchestra and May festivals are well supported.

The University of Cincinnati is in Burnet Woods Park to the north of the city. Just beyond in Avondale is the University School, and still farther north at College Hill is Ohio Military Institute. Fifteen miles northeast on Indian Hill is the Cincinnati Country Day School. South in Walnut Hills are Kendrick College Preparatory School, the Schuster-Martin School and the Cincinnati Conservatory. South in Eden Park is the Art Academy. The College of Music is nearer the center.

An outgrowth of Miss Butler's School, this was for years conducted under the name of Oakhurst by Helen F Kendrick. On her death in 1927, Miss Benedict, for some time associate principal, took over the direction and gave the school its present name. While the work in the upper grades is essentially college preparatory and a number of girls are sent each year to eastern colleges, the lower schools are progressive in tone. Two branch Kendrick Primary Schools were opened in the fall of 1928 to prepare little children for the main school. About fifteen older girls are each year taken into the residence.

Sixth in population and fifth in industry in the U S., Cleveland has a fourteen mile water front on the south shore of Lake Erie. Its excellent harbor at the mouth of the Cuyahoga river with ten miles of docks has resulted in great commercial development. Three great viaducts bridge the Cuyahoga, permitting the lake steamers to pass under. Here the iron ore of Lake Erie meets the coal and coke of Ohio and results in an iron and steel industry of which the output is valued at a billion dollars annually. The rapid growth of the city has been marked by periods of political corruption and civic pride. Its building act, its school surveys, its crime surveys are evidences of civic interest aroused.

One of the most vigorous and progressive of the girls schools in the middle west, this well equipped and highly organized institution originated as a day school and the preponderance of its enrollment is still in the day department. The small boarding group was established in 1904 when the school came under the management of Alice Gladden who died in 1926, and Grace Latimer Jones, now Mrs McClure, wife of a Princeton professor. In 1912 the school was incorporated and additions were built. About three-fourths of the graduates enter college. The methods are progressive throughout, the life is vigorous, and the opportunities for extra-curricular interests and outdoor activities are many. In 1927 a reorganization was effected and a campaign started to raise funds for a country day school plant in the outskirts of the city. See page 831.

The home of the National Cash Register Company, Dayton is a city of large and varied commercial interests. It has been under the "commissioner manager" form of government since 1914 and has a notable community welfare system. Nearby is the famous government aviation field. The city lies at the junction of the Miami river and canal, which was subject to disastrous overflow until drainage and protective dykes were engineered by Arthur E. Morgan. It was this same Morgan who was influential in founding Moraine Park School, discontinued in 1927, and who is now president of Antioch College at Yellow Springs, fifteen miles distant. He instituted the cooperative system of education whereby Antioch students spend alternate weeks working in industrial plants and studying at college.

More in the public eye than any other military school, this institution was established by the late Henry Harrison Culver. The school has been continued by the Culver estate which has never taken a dividend, but turned back all earnings into the budget for actual operating expenses. General Gignilliat, for fourteen years commandant, became superintendent in 1910. He is a tactful and capable administrator and has an admirable system of supervision of student activities outside the classroom and the drill field, and holds advanced ideas upon some phases of secondary school education. The administrative, academic, military, athletic, medical, and business departments are separate and distinct. Cavalry, artillery, and infantry senior units of the R O T C have long been maintained. For a quarter of a century the United States War Department has given the military work of the school the highest rating. Culver has taken the lead in introducing innovations which, at the time, required imagination and courage—in its participation in presidential inaugurals with the famous Black Horse Troop, in the use of movies for advertising, in colored printing in its literature, in the establishment of a department of mental hygiene. Academic courses are arranged to meet the varying entrance requirements of over a hundred colleges in which eighty per cent of Culver graduates have enrolled. During 1929-30 the Harvard School of Education made a survey of Culver, the most extensive and expensive ever attempted for a private school. Guidance is also sought from the Universities of Michigan and Wisconsin. See page 764.

High standards for its locality have characterized Howe School since 1900. Thoroughly Episcopalian and thoroughly military, it was established by Bishop Knickerbacker upon the bequest of John B. Howe. The school has been fortunate in its rectors. The Rev John H. McKenzie brought Howe to a high degree of excellence in his twenty-five years of incumbency. He was succeeded in 1920 by Dr. Young, who has been widely known in the educational work of the Episcopal Church for many years. Students are required to take the examinations of the College Entrance Examination Board to receive the school diploma. Howe maintains a junior unit of the R.O.T.C. as a means of discipline and physical training, a total of three hours a week being given to drill under the direction of officers detailed by the War Department. BLOOMFIELD HILLS, MICH.

Nineteen miles north of Detroit, in southern Oakland County, Bloomfield Hills has long been the home of George G. Booth of the Scripps-Booth newspapers, craftsman and patron of the crafts and arts. THE CRANBROOK FOUNDATION was here established in 1926 by Mr and Mrs Booth who gave a 275 acre estate, buildings and endowment for six institutions, of which five are now in operation, totaling in cost and equipment approximately $12,000,000. Christ Church-Cranbrook (Episcopal) is the one unit not strictly educational. The Cranbrook Institute of Science will be completed in the fall of 1931. The buildings, including an astronomical observatory, were designed by Eliel Saarinen of Helsingfors, Finland, and are adorned by modern masterpieces of sculpture and the decorative arts.

The greatest automobile city in the world, Detroit in the ten years from 1910 to 1920 more than doubled in population. Its growth in the last decade has been equally remarkable.

Henry Ford's plants and the General Motors have drawn to the city a large foreign element. The interests of the people at large are indicated in the 16,000 enrolled in the Cass Technical High School. A notable system of parks and boulevards, well planned and successful real estate developments, municipal buildings surpassed by none in the country, are outstanding features. To the north in beautiful country lie great estates and the homes of Henry Ford and motor magnates. In the Grosse Pointe district are the Grosse Pointe Country Day and the Detroit University Schools.

The usual advantages of the country day school are now offered at Detroit University School, which has had varied changes and reorganizations, made necessary by the rapid growth of the city. Two years after its opening it was incorporated and combined with the Detroit School for Boys which had been running for ten years. In 1914 Frederick L. Bliss, who had been principal since 1901, resigned and a reorganization of the school, both as to finances and to faculty, was undertaken by the trustees. The second reorganization in 1916, under the direction of an advisory committee of its patrons, named Mr Fletcher head master. In the fall of 1928 the school moved to its new half million dollar plant. William H. Fries, A. B., Cornell, A. M., Columbia, is associate head master.

One of the most successful and prosperous day schools in the country, this school developed under the management of the Misses Liggett from the Detroit Home and Day School, established by the Rev James D. Liggett and his daughters, under whose management it has remained continuously It is an institution of first rank, well organized and equipped, with a large and resourceful faculty. The pupils represent the best families of Detroit. Over three hundred of its graduates have entered college, and the Alumnæ Association cooperates heartily with the school. A branch school known as "The Eastern Liggett School," 2571 Burns Ave, was opened in the eastern part of the city in 1913, providing for the growing patronage of that section In 1925 a new addition to this was built and the older school moved over to the east side, the lower school being merged with it, making the new Liggett school. In 1928, Miss Ogden succeeded Jeannette M. Liggett who remains in touch as trustee and principal emerita.

Chicago, raw and potent, has yet a vital kind of incipient culture. Swept by harsh winds in winter, broiled by summer sun, famous for its gunmen and its unequaled record for homicides, for its mayor, "Big Bill" Thompson, and political corruption, for Al Capone, executive genius of racketeers; the common people still take pride in the civic opera, the symphony orchestras, the art museum and other public institutions.

The second largest city in the United States, Chicago is the fourth in the world and may eventually be the greatest Here the raw products of the great central agricultural regions and the west meet the coal of the central west, are prepared and interchanged. It is a growing manufacturing and trading center The city with vision and civic pride has looked to the future and devised a plan for its great future growth The Lake Front, once a freight yard, has been filled in, providing for parks and public buildings and the largest stadium in the world.

The University of Chicago, established in 1903 on the World's Fair site and enrolling over 14,000 students, is in the South Side section. Here, too, are the Harvard School for Boys, Kenwood-Loring School for Girls, the Starrett School, and the Faulkner School. The North Side, which extends above the Chicago river, is the most fashionable residential section. Here are the Francis W. Parker School, the Chicago Latin Schools for Boys and for Girls, and Miss Haire's School.

One of the earliest community enterprises, this school was opened by twelve families on the North Side with Mabel S. Vickery as teacher. In 1894 it was incorporated with Miss Vickery as president of the corporation and Robert S. Bates as head master. After thirty-eight years of private ownership, the school was reorganized in 1926 by an association of parents, a new site purchased and new buildings constructed. Mr Northrop came to the school at that time after six years as head master of the Brearley School, New York. The school has high academic standards and prepares efficiently for college. In 1930 grounds for an athletic field bordering the north branch of the Chicago river were given the school, and plans are under way for its future development as a country day school with a small boarding department.

The educational methods and principles formulated by Colonel Francis Wayland Parker led to the establishment of this school. Training in initiative; work which utilizes the child's own interests; freedom with balancing responsibility; real experience with actual materials; treatment of children as individuals with work adapted to the needs and abilities of each, are among the guiding principles followed. Music, art, handwork and play are included in all individual programs. The school has contributed through experimentation to progressive education. The results appear in the eight volumes of the "Francis W. Parker School Studies in Education." Miss Cooke has been principal since the school started. See page 858.

The oldest girls school in the west, Monticello was founded by Benjamin Godfrey, an old Cape Cod sea captain who had made a fortune in eastern trade and settled here because of large land holdings. The school was organized by Rev. Theron Baldwin, a friend of Captain Godfrey, who was influenced by the ideas of Mary Lyon. In 1841 the school was incorporated and graduated its first class. In its long history it has played an important part in the education of young women of the section and is appropriately spoken of as the "Mount Holyoke of the West." The school has a large body of loyal alumnæ organized in many associations throughout the west. Under Miss Congdon, principal since 1918, who had done graduate work in Michigan, and Oxford, England, and who, before coming to Monticello, was dean of women in Hillsdale and Wilson Colleges, the junior college department has been greatly strengthened. This successful junior college and preparatory school had its beginning as the "Ferry Institute for Young Women" founded by the Rev. William Montague Ferry. Formerly administered by the same board of trustees as Lake Forest College and Lake Forest Academy, the school is now an independent corporation with its own board of trustees and has recently absorbed the Lake Forest School of Music. In the past half century several thousand young women have been enrolled. College preparation is stressed, but various special courses are provided. The school has been fortunate in its principals Miss Tremain had broad experience in girls schools in the east and the west before coming to Ferry Hall in 1918. She is assisted by a strong faculty of college women, and under her able leadership endowment has been raised for the construction of new buildings. At the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the school in 1929, two new residence halls were opened which increased the enrollment facilities. See page 834.

Lake Forest Academy was established by public spirited Chicago citizens who purchased 1300 acres of land bordering on Lake Michigan where now the wealthiest and most exclusive Chicagoans reside. A memorial building is to commemorate head master Welch who in 1900 gave his life to save a group of students from an ice floe. William Mather Lewis, now president of Lafayette, was succeeded in 1913 by the present head master. 'Big Dick' Richards came to the school with determination to maintain the college preparatory standards of Hotchkiss where for seven years he had been a master. Staunchedly he has stood against the regional militaristic trend and has efficiently prepared for the great universities sons of western families who would otherwise have been sent to eastern schools. On his board of trustees are names potent in Chicago finance, some of whom can easily make up the proposed million dollar building fund. In 1930 head master Richards, who had long cogitated a 'vision of the ideal school,' announced 'a new plan' which, tentatively tried out in the spring, met with such success as to elicit the necessary funds to put it in operation and led Time to give him the biggest publicity any head master has had in that lively newsmagazine. Founded as the Northwestern Military Academy at Highland Park, Illinois, by Colonel H. P. Davidson, this well known school has since 1911 been directed by the son of the founder who reorganized the academy, added naval features, and moved the school to its present location. An infantry unit of the R O T C., the academy is recognized by both Navy and War Departments and has for years had high rating. An honor system, followed for over thirty years, has enabled the school to abolish all forms of punishment. The attendance of the school is limited to two hundred.

Notable among the schools of the west, Shattuck was the conception of the Rt. Rev Henry B Whipple, the first Bishop of Minnesota, who, familiar with such schools in England as Winchester and Rugby, saw the need of a permanent educational institution in this region As early as 1858 the Rev James L Breck had established in Faribault a small day school which was later incorporated by Dr Whipple as the Bishop Seabury Mission. Out of this have grown the three renowned schools, Seabury Divinity School, St Mary's Hall, and Shattuck. The boys school was named for an early benefactor, Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck of Boston. In 1916 the Rt. Rev F A McElwain became rector and Mr Newhall, connected with Shattuck for over twenty years, head master There is a strong faculty of university graduates During its long career more than three thousand boys have been trained in its halls The students are drawn largely from well-to-do families of the great northwest Military training is required of all, and the students are organized into a battalion of infantry. Under the supervision of Bertram C Newton, now head master of the Pingry School, Elizabeth, N J, it became one of the pioneer country day schools and ranks today among the foremost college preparatory schools of the type. There are three closely coordinated departments. The Junior School, in the city, for younger boys, is under the direction of Mary G McDonald. The Senior Country School with its boarding department is seven miles west of the city. The scholastic standards in all departments are high. Mr Alder, for seventeen years principal of Adelphi Academy and before that an instructor at Exeter and Penn Charter, was elected to the head mastership in 1926 to succeed Raymond B Johnson. The Junior School is at Portland Avenue and Dale Street and is under the direction of Beulah Brown. The Senior School has maintained its country day features since 1914. Unique among country day schools, Saint Paul boys wear uniforms and devote one period a day to military drill. Mr. Briggs, a son of Dean Briggs of Harvard, had previous experience in the Hill School and in the Kansas City Country Day School, and under his able and scholarly leadership this school has taken front rank in the College Board examinations.

The former Loomis School was taken over by leading citizens, wholly reorganized, given its present name, and put under the direction of Miss Converse, who had previously been principal of the North Avenue School, Atlanta, Ga. There is now a strong faculty of college trained women and about ninety per cent of the students enter colleges and universities in various parts of the country. A broader curriculum than is required by the College Board is emphasized. A modified form of country day school program has been followed since 1924, when the school moved to its present site.

Recently reorganized on a country day basis, this is one of the oldest schools in the Mississippi valley. Conducted under the charter of Washington University, and founded by the Rev William Greenleaf Eliot who had played an active part in the establishment of the University, it is now the leading preparatory school for girls in St. Louis For thirty-five years Edmund H Sears directed the policies of the school. In 1929, after an interim, Mr. Garrison, previously principal of Staten Island Academy, took charge The following year the school moved to a new site and started its country day program. High standards in college preparation and general cultural courses have long been maintained. See page 835.

The only Christian Science educational institution that has proved successful, The Principia is but one of scores that have been started. Established by Mrs. Mary Kimball Morgan, it has continued under her control as president of the board of trustees and that of her sons. There is no direct connection with or financial support from the Christian Science society, but Christian Science practices, ideals and standards prevail among faculty and students. The school owes its great success to the organizing genius and vision of the present director, in charge since 1920. A summer camp has been maintained in the Rockies for some years. Carefully laid plans for an endowment fund for a four year college resulted in the announcement, in 1930, of the raising of two million dollars and the purchase of a three mile tract of land along the Mississippi above the village of Elsah, Ill. COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO. Alt 5978 ft. Pop 30,105 (1920) 33,237 (1930).

At the foot of Pike's Peak, Colorado Springs is one of the best known Rocky Mountain resorts. The coeducational Colorado College dates from 1874 and has over 1100 students. The Academy of Fine Arts makes its headquarters in Perkins Hall, one of the College buildings. The San Luis School in 1930 moved three miles northeast from its city site to the plant of the former St. Stephen's School, discontinued some years ago. Ten miles southeast, on the eastern edge of the Rockies, is Fountain Valley School.

Immediately successful, this school opened with an enrollment of over fifty boys, and half as many more will be accepted in 1931. Under Mr. Froelicher, a skilful school administrator with successful experience in the east, the school is progressive but not radical. Every effort is made to give the boys a vision of historic backgrounds that will prepare them to participate intelligently in American life. A junior college department will be organized later. Six masters from Avon Old Farms accompanied Mr. Froelicher to Fountain Valley and much of the work there started is being continued here. New dormitories are planned to keep pace with the expected growth. See page 769.

Established by Mr. Moran, this year round boarding school is modern in its tendencies, not because of adherence to any theory, but because of its interest in the boy as the unit. Administrative and executive capacity is developed in the boys by giving them responsible work to do in connection with the administration of the school and the school plant. Most of the graduates enter college. In 1928 a new plant was acquired at Atascadero, California, on the coast highway. A three months travel cruise to the South Seas is a 1931 development.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. Alt 267 ft. Pop 576,673 (1920) 1,238,048 (1930).

Los Angeles, the largest city in western America, has grown with phenomenal rapidity and has become a great center of industry and commerce. The original Mexican settlement midway between the mountains and the sea, and twenty miles from the latter, centered about the plaza where still stands the Church of Our Lady Queen of the Angels, dating from 1818. The city limits embrace a great area from the San Fernando valley, over the Hollywood hills and the Santa Monica mountains, to the sea. The attractiveness of the climate to the retired farming class of the middle west, the discovery of oil, the development of harbor facilities, the cinematograph, and the airplane are among the factors contributing to the city's prosperity.

The private schools have kept pace with the city's growth. While the secretarial, trade and industrial schools are still in the business section and mainly on Figueroa Street, preparatory schools are found in all the residential regions South, in the vicinity of Exposition Park with its new stadium seating 90,000, are the University of Southern California, and a few private schools. In the tree lined old residential part to the southwest are many schools of local appeal, among them Miss Thomas', Martha Weaver, Miss Fulmer's, and Harvard.

Near Westlake Park, four miles west of Broadway, is Otis Art Institute. Between the Wilshire district and Hollywood are Page Military Academy and the Marlborough School. The Cumnock plant was leased in 1930 by the Macurda-Drisko interests.

Midway between the heart of the city and Santa Monica, bounded by Beverly and Washington Boulevards, is developing a great educational center. Here are to be located the University of California at Los Angeles, The Lutheran University, Loyola University and Occidental College, and the permanent buildings for the summer work of the Methodists. Among the preparatory schools, Westlake and its affiliated Holmby College, adjoining Beverly Hills, and the Hollywood and Urban Military Academies are occupying new buildings. The plants of the Harvard School, St. John's Academy and the Culver Art Center are to be located here.

The only Episcopal school for boys in Los Angeles, this has long appealed to parents who wish for their sons the atmosphere of the regulation church school. Established as a non-sectarian institution by Grenville Emery, a Boston man who later opened other schools on the West Coast, it was taken over by the church and incorporated in 1911. Under Dr Robert B Gooden from 1912 until his resignation in 1931 to take over the duties of assistant bishop of the diocese of Los Angeles, the school prospered, though the emphasis on military training has influenced many churchmen to send their sons to other schools. A new site west of the city has been purchased at Beverly Boulevard and Canyon Roads, to which the school will eventually move.

Few American cities have so much local color as San Francisco. Time, earthquake, fire, have not destroyed the local flavor. It still remains the quintessence of California and the golden west. Built on the sand dunes at the tip of the peninsula bounded by the Pacific, the Golden Gate and the Bay, its street cars must be hauled up the hill by cable. The Presidio, famous Mexican and United States military headquarters, facing the Golden Gate, is adjacent to the site of the Panama Pacific Exposition grounds, some of the buildings of which have been preserved as a permanent memorial. Golden Gate Park, reaching to the Pacific, is unique among parks. The Chinese element, segregated north of Market Street, has made San Francisco's Chinatown famous for its picturesqueness.

Bishop Brent founded this school primarily for the sons of army, navy and civil government officers in the Islands. In 1925 suitable provision was made for accommodating girls in the resident department. The enrollment is limited to children of American or European parentage. The school is directly under the jurisdiction of the Episcopal Bishop of the Philippine Islands, who is its sole trustee. Its management is in the hands of the head master. As Baguio is within two days, over mountain trails, of the frontier of civilization, the students have the opportunity of observing the life and customs of various Igorot tribes. Stress is still laid on the classics, and there is adequate preparation for American colleges. The pupils come from the different islands of the Philippine Archipelago, as well as from the United States, Europe, China, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Sumatra, etc. R. B. Ogilby, president of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., was the first head of the school. Mr. Amos took charge in 1927, after fifteen years in the Newark Academy, eight years as assistant head master, and under his skilful administration the enrollment has been increased and all departments of the school strengthened. Fac: 40. C E B Exams candidates '30, 1; '26-'30, 2.

Mr Badley, who derived his early inspiration from serving with Dr. Cecil Reddie of Abbotsholme, out of his inheritance established this coeducational school — the first in England. The remarkable personality of its founder has resulted in his realizing his ideal, "the fullest individual development of each child." Much attention is given to music, arts and crafts. Boys and girls together are in two groups, junior and senior. The separate grammar school for fifty children from four to twelve is conducted along Montessori lines. A splendid spirit of camaraderie prevails. Much has been published about the school, including a book by Mr. Badley himself.

ROCESTER, DERBYSHIRE.

ABBOTSHOLME SCHOOL Boys Ages 7-18 Est 1889.

Colin H. C. Sharp, M.A., Oxon, Head Master.

Tui: £135-180.

Under Dr Cecil Reddie, the founder, one of the most notable living figures in the school world, this school was the first to break away from the conventional and the traditional. Out of it has grown the 'New School' movement of the Continent. The leaders of the Landerziehungsheim and the Ecole Nouvelle of France were trained here. Scores of schools have been directly influenced by Abbotsholme and its indirect influence has been world wide. Dr. Reddie, through the boldness of his innovations, has influenced thousands of pedagogs who have never heard his name. Since his resignation in 1927 as head master, Abbotsholme, now a resident public school, has been controlled by a council largely of old boys who continue to educate by human understanding and scientific methods. The present head master, late of St. Stephen's College, Delhi, and the University of Delhi, has had considerable experience in teaching boys. The junior school receives boys from 7 to 12, the senior school from 11 to 18.

This interesting experiment makes an international appeal and welcomes American children. Mr and Mrs Leonard K. Elmhirst are the donors of the huge estate and of the means wherewith to develop this extensive economic, social, and educational experiment. Its enrollment was restricted to some twenty-five local children up to 1931 when Mr and Mrs Curry, long identified with progressive education in England and the United States, returned to England. After four years as head of the science department at Bedales, Mr Curry came to the United States, took an instructorship at Oak Lane, a progressive country day school in Philadelphia, and the next year, 1927, was appointed head master. He returns to England to direct all the educational policies of this foundation with the primary purpose of making education an adventure. The Primary School for children two to eight is under Winifred Harley, an Englishwoman, who returns to England after ten years at the Merrill-Palmer Motherhood and Home Training School in Detroit. The Junior School, ages eight to twelve, will have its inception this year. The Senior School will be developed later. See page 876.

PARIS. Pop 2,907,200 (1920).

Paris, the capital of France, is the center of the art, financial, and industrial life of the nation to an extent hardly paralleled in any other important country. And yet the typical Parisian need not be French — he may be Jewish, Polish or of almost any race.

The modern city fills the limestone basin cut across the Seine. Montmartre climbs the northern rim crowned by the aspiring dome of Sacré-Cœur. The Red Mill, built to catch the western winds, now catches the western gold. The earliest settlements were on the islands in the river about which the Roman and medieval cities were built. On the left bank, the Sorbonne has for centuries attracted students from every foreign country and has been the center of the Latin Quarter.

Haussmannized and "mansarded," Paris has long impressed the unsophisticated as the acme of the magnificent and the beautiful, though in city plan and architectural beauty there are things in Houston and Kansas City superior to anything Paris can show. The somewhat artificial atmosphere still known to Americans, reflects, even after centuries, the influence of the frivolous and extravagant Bourbons. Americans on their first visit haunt Cook's and the Place de l'Opéra. Those who have been there before make their headquarters around L'Etoile. Fashionable schools for Americans are found in the Parc Monceau and from L'Etoile north toward the Bois de Boulogne. Schools in surrounding municipalities easily accessible to Paris are generally regarded as Parisian. North of the Bois are schools at Neuilly, Colombes, and Sannois. South is Boulogne and, across the Seine, Saint-Cloud.

FLORENCE. Alt 180 ft. Pop 253,565 (1920).

Florence, proud mistress of Tuscany, is the quintessence of the Renaissance. Set at the crossing of trade routes, on the Arno, out of its commerce came its arts and wealth. Just as imperial Rome is masculine, Florence, surrounded by almond blossom misted hills, is feminine. Perhaps this is why the pensions and hotels are filled with art mad spinsters. The intellectual, esthetic and spiritual inspiration of the place, its palazzos and villas, formerly to be had for a song, have appealed to numerous resident schools. Ensnared in old villas on the slopes of the hills to the east and north, toward Prato and Fiesole, where Boccaccio told his tales, are a number of schools for American girls. Near San Dominico, in a villa centuries old, surrounded by its dependencies and chapel, is the Villa Collina Ridente. The Florentine School is in San Dominico, Eversholme in Rovezzano.

The Fifth Floating University Cruise Around the World sailed from New York in September, 1930, returning in June, 1931. The academic calendar includes two semesters, one in Europe and one in the Orient, and enrollments are accepted for either or both terms. Dr. Lough has appointed a faculty of deans and professors from American universities and the courses offered under their direction will be accepted for credits at many institutions. In addition to the students, a limited number of parents and qualified older persons interested in education are accepted. The curriculum includes both preparatory and university courses.

THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY, Exeter, N. H.
LEWIS PERRY, A.M., L.H.D., Principal.

The Academy furnishes the elements of a solid education by thorough instruction in all the studies required for admission to the leading Colleges and Scientific Schools.

Candidates for admission to The Phillips Exeter Academy must be at least thirteen years of age and must satisfy their instructors as to their fitness by certificates from former teachers and by examinations. Every applicant must also furnish satisfactory evidence of good moral character.

A number of endowed scholarships are awarded annually to Students in the Academy, and to Students in Harvard College. The total endowment for this purpose is about $500,000. Tuition awards are also made each year from the general funds, and students may earn money through regular work.

Exeter's new House Plan, to be inaugurated in the fall of 1931, calls for the building of four new dormitories and the rearrangement of several of the present buildings in new groupings. Boys will receive instructions in groups of not more than ten.

The present equipment includes buildings for recitations and lectures, Library, Residence and Dining Halls, Laboratories, Infirmary.

The Playing Fields cover more than 300 acres and contain Football Fields, Running Tracks, Baseball Diamonds, Tennis Courts, Skating Rinks, and a large wooded area. An opportunity for wholesome exercise for every boy is supplied by a Gymnasium, Swimming Pool, Baseball Cage and Track House, Squash Racquets building, and Boathouse.

For information in regard to entrance, address Joseph S. Ford, Director of Admissions.

PHILLIPS ACADEMY, Andover, Mass.

ALFRED E. STEARNS, Litt.D., L.H.D., LL.D., Head.

Phillips Academy, founded in 1778 by members of the Phillips family, is the oldest incorporated academy in the U. S.

It is international in its representation and democratic in its life and spirit. Its essential appeal is to students of serious educational purpose and high moral standards.

To be eligible for entrance, candidates must present satisfactory school records and evidence of good character, and must pass entrance examinations

Dormitory accommodations and supervision enable students to pass by gradual and natural stages from the paternalism of home life to the freedom of a College career.

Williams Hall, with its close supervision, offers attractive and helpful surroundings to the young boy just leaving home for his school career.

New buildings designed by Charles Platt include an Auditorium, Office Building, Science Building, Dormitories, Dining Hall, Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with a capacity of one hundred thirty thousand volumes. An Art Gallery and a Chapel will be ready for occupancy September 1931. A new and modern Inn is in operation.

Extensive playgrounds and athletic fields are available for the use of students. All students are required to take regular gymnasium work or engage in sports. The gymnasium, swimming pool, and the Case Memorial building, providing complete facilities for athletic activities during the winter, are in charge of a competent physical director.

Endowments and scholarship funds provide pecuniary aid for about a hundred scholarly and ambitious boys of limited means.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

WASSOOKEAG SCHOOL, Bryant Hill, Dexter, Me.
LLOYD HARVEY HATCH, Head Master.

The Wassookeag Method has set a new standard—one Teacher for every three Boys Under Wassookeag's tutorial impetus the regular program of two academic years is completed in one calendar year. The SCHOOL and WASSOOKEAG SCHOOL-CAMP, which serves as the summer session, present an unusual record. No graduate has failed to enter College on scheduled time.

Wassookeag "results" have proved the thesis that boys from 15 to 18 are ready for College standards. The Wassookeag Method: University Tutors and Standards, Continuity in the Educational Process, Junior College Transition Study, Orientation, Solution of the Scholastic Problem. Early application should be made for the academic year 1931-32.

TILTON SCHOOL, Tilton, New Hampshire.

THOMAS W. WATKINS, A.B., Ed.M., Head Master.

This well equipped, progressive New England school for Boys is noted for its thorough Scholastic Training. The College Preparatory Course has enabled many Tilton graduates to enter and to maintain a high standard in the leading Colleges and Universities of the country. There are also General and Business Courses for Boys not going to College.

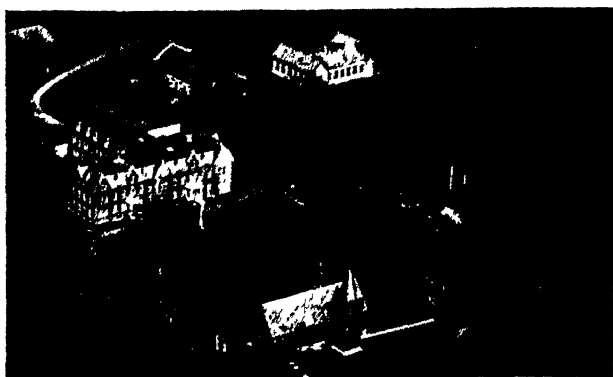

An excellent Junior School for Boys eight to fourteen provides for those who have not completed the Elementary Grades. It is separate from the Senior School, having its own school building and cottage dormitories with experienced and kindly house mothers. Classes small; individual Instruction.

Tilton has a spacious Campus and a twenty-five acre Athletic Field which has ample facilities for every type of Outdoor Sport—Football, Baseball, Track, Tennis and Soccer. The environment is ideal for Winter Sports—Skiing, Skating, Tobogganing and Hockey. Golf is available without additional charge. A large Gymnasium provides for Indoor Exercise and Basketball.

The life at Tilton is happy and wholesome and more like that of a Home than of a School.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

HOLDERNESS SCHOOL, Plymouth, N. H.

REV. ALBAN RICHEY, JR., Rector.

Holderness, an Episcopal School for Boys 11-20, among the foothills of the White Mountains, is three hours ride from Boston. The School grounds of 20 acres are 700 feet above sea level, on a wooded bluff overlooking the Pemigewasset and Baker river valleys, a beautiful and healthful site.

Instruction in all studies, required for admission to the leading Colleges and Scientific Schools, is given in small Classes which permit a more exact knowledge of the needs and weaknesses of each Boy. A teaching force that is unusually strong, when compared with the number of Pupils, enables the Faculty really to tutor many of the Students. The disadvantages of a purely tutoring school are not felt, inasmuch as the Boys are at all times under careful supervision and direction.

The Dormitories are each in charge of a master who occupies a room adjoining. The Younger Boys have separate alcoves and beds in the Dormitories; the Older Boys have double rooms.

There are excellent facilities for all sports, which are conducted under supervision. The Campus is laid out with a Baseball Diamond and a Football Field. A quarter-mile Running Track encloses the Athletic Field. A well equipped Gymnasium provides a fine opportunity for Indoor Sports during the winter months. For those who enjoy real Winter Sports there is a fine Toboggan Chute, Outdoor Skating Rink, and opportunities for Skiing, and Snow-shoeing.

Boys take care of their rooms, alcoves and corridors, and may be called upon for service in the dining rooms or in other ways. Earnest work, happy spirit, and a homelike atmosphere.

THE STEARNS SCHOOL, Mont Vernon, N. H.

ARTHUR FRENCH STEARNS, A.B., Principal.

The Stearns School is in a beautiful country village in the hills of southern New Hampshire. Cool summers and the dry, bracing air have made Mont Vernon famous as a summer resort.

The Main Building includes Recitation Rooms, Physical and Chemical Laboratories, and a Gymnasium. The Boys live in Lincoln, Andover and Mitchell Halls and the Lodge, which contain airy Sleeping Rooms with all modern improvements.

The Upper School prepares Boys for any College or University while giving them, at the same time, the best possible all-round Education. Its certificate admits to many colleges.

The Lower School, offering Seventh and Eighth Grade work, was established to train Boys thoroughly for the duties and responsibilities of the larger Schools and Academies. Since the Lower School's object is to prepare especially for Phillips Academy, textbooks are selected and the Courses of Study arranged with special reference to the demands of that Institution.

A Teaching Force, unusually strong in proportion to the number of Boys, affords nearly all the advantages of a regular tutoring school, but without any of the disadvantages, for Stearns boys are at all times under careful supervision.

Each Boy is required to engage in some healthful recreation during the play hours. The Campus affords excellent opportunities for all Outdoor Activities. The rate is $1200.

Write Mr. Sargent 11 Beacon Street Boston.

NEW HAMPTON SCHOOL FOR BOYS,

New Hampton, New Hampshire.

FREDERICK SMITH, A.M., Principal.

New Hampton is a place where a Boy may live a wholesome, normal life much in the out-of-doors and where he will be taught how to study and be trained to think for himself.

New Hampton in the Pemigewasset Valley is surrounded by beautiful wooded hills and is essentially a school village. It has no industries and is free from distracting influences.

The Teachers are skilled instructors, real men, young enough to appreciate the Boy's point of view, but old enough to have Wisdom and Experience.

This famous old School has produced many leaders in New England public life "In its beautiful environment, in the quality of its students, in its traditions and its moral and social life, in the enthusiastic loyalty of its alumni, and in the record of scholarly purpose and attainment made by its graduates in their studies in college and professional schools, it certainly has no superior among secondary schools," are the words of a New England College President.

Every Boy enjoys some form of Athletics, and all Sports are carefully supervised. Hard work and hard play under careful guidance fit the New Hampton boy to enter College or Business, with the mental, moral, and physical equipment to compete successfully and to work harmoniously with others.

THE CLARK SCHOOL, Hanover, N. H.

CLIFFORD PEASE CLARK, Ph.D., Director.

FRANK MILLETT MORGAN, Ph.D., Asst. Director.

The purpose of The Clark School is primarily to prepare a boy adequately and thoroughly for College or University, and to inculcate in him those basic principles and high ideals which tend toward the development of a manly character.

Hanover, the seat of Dartmouth College, within sight of the Green Mountains and forty miles from the southern spur of the White Mountains, is an ideal location for a Preparatory School. The proximity to Dartmouth offers many unusual advantages, and a certain inspiration is gained from contact with college men, a strengthening of a boy's purpose to acquire that development which he sees going on all around him.

Two distinct courses of study are offered—a four-year Preparatory Course preparing for the College Entrance Board Examinations and Accredited to colleges admitting by Certificate, and a two-year Intensive Course for boys over sixteen who have lost time through sickness or who have attended a school where no emphasis was laid on the exacting details of preparation for College Entrance.

The enrollment is limited to sixty and, with an average of seven students to a class, much personal attention and direction are possible. Associated with the Directors of the School, both of whom were for ten years professors at Dartmouth College, are able instructors, specialists in their subjects, chosen for their fitness to lead young men as well as for their scholastic ability.

The school supports four teams—Football, Baseball, Basketball, and a Ski Team. Hanover is widely known as a home of Winter Sports. Under the supervision of the Athletic Director every student takes setting-up exercises daily. An eighteen-hole Golf Course, Tennis Courts, and Riding Horses are available at a nominal charge.

GOVERNOR DUMMER ACADEMY,

South Byfield, Mass.

EDWARD W. EAMES, M.A., Head Master.

In 1761 the Royal Governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony, William Dummer, bequeathed his farm of 360 acres with the income therefrom, to establish a grammar school for boys. This school, thirty miles from Boston in the beautiful, rolling North Shore country, retains much of the charm and tradition of old New England.

Governor Dummer is a genuinely small school of ninety boys and twelve masters. This makes it possible to give each boy personal attention, and to maintain a friendly, homelike atmosphere. The oil painting of Governor Dummer here reproduced hangs in the hall of the Mansion House, a beautiful and historic dwelling, built by the Governor about 1716 and now occupied by the Head Master.

PRESENTING HORSEMANSHIP AWARD

MR. LANGER'S SCHOOL FOR BOYS, Auburndale, Mass.

WALTER C. LANGER, A. M., Director.

Mr. Langer's School, formerly the Rocky Mountain Ranch School, Silver City, New Mexico, and transferred to the East in 1930, opened at Islington Manor, Auburndale, in April, 1931.

Like the Rocky Mountain Ranch School it is designed for adolescent boys who do not get on well in the regular school due to lack of interest in school subjects, inability to concentrate or to cooperate in social activities.

With the enrollment limited to fifteen, highly individualized work is possible. The studies for which the boy has a special aptitude are emphasized at the beginning and others are introduced into the curriculum as rapidly as sufficient interest can be stimulated in them. The most modern findings of Education, Psychology and Psychiatry are employed in studying the Boy's particular problem.

The new school building, an exact duplicate of Islington Castle, England, has large, spacious rooms with hand carved woodwork and beautiful stained glass. It is on a 7 acre peninsula which juts out into the Charles River, and has all the advantages of proximity to a large city together with the privacy and opportunities of the country.

Facilities for all types of sport are available. Boating, bathing, tennis, baseball, golf, skating, skiing, and ice-boating are particularly emphasized due to their body building qualities.

With a limited enrollment, Mr. Langer's School is able to maintain a true homelike atmosphere which is lacking in larger institutions and yet is so essential to the emotional development of the boy during adolescence.

DEERFIELD ACADEMY, Deerfield, Massachusetts
FRANK L. BOYDEN, M.A., Amherst '02, Director.

Deerfield, founded in 1797, is one of the leading schools for Boys. Several of its buildings date from Pre-Revolutionary days. Its ideals are true to the old traditions of Scholarship and Moral Training, but the Academy of today is thoroughly modernized and completely in touch with the life of the times.

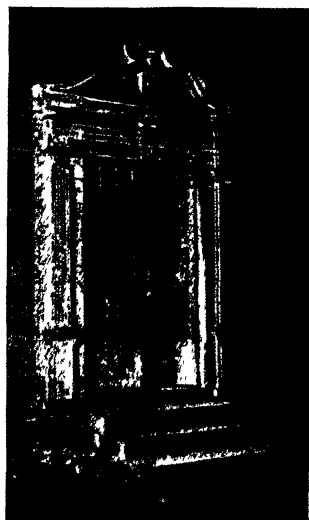

The Four Year Course of Study corresponds to that of the senior high school, and prepares students for any College or University. The School Certificate is accepted by all Colleges admitting without examination. The Boarding Department is exclusively for Boys.

Dormitories are splendidly equipped, as are the recently completed Gymnasium and Academy Building.

Fields, Hills, and Streams are a part of the School Campus, and each Student takes part in some form of daily Athletic Exercise and Sport, — Baseball, Hockey, Football, Tennis, or Basketball.

Glee Club and Dramatics are popular extra-curricular activities. Each year members of the Senior Class present a Shakespearean comedy as part of the regular Commencement exercises.

BERKSHIRE MEMORIAL BUILDING

BERKSHIRE SCHOOL, Sheffield, Massachusetts.SEAVER B. BUCK, A B., Harvard, Head Master.

The School Estate of three hundred fifty acres, four miles from Sheffield, lies at an elevation of nine hundred feet on the eastern slope of Mt. Everett, overlooking the beautiful valley of the Housatonic.

The Five Year Course of Study is designed to fit boys for College or for any of the Scientific Schools. It is the belief of the Head Master that most of the unsatisfactory work in School results not from native stupidity, but from slovenly habits of study. The study hours are treated, therefore, as of first importance, and are directed with the utmost care.

The number of masters is sufficient to give whatever individual assistance may be necessary, and boys whose work is unsatisfactory are required to make up their deficiencies daily under the direction of the master who teaches the subject.

There are unusual opportunities for open air exercise, apart from the organized school athletics. For boys who require it, classes in special gymnastic work are arranged under the supervision of the Physical Director. A resident trained nurse is in attendance.

The School is non-sectarian. On Sunday mornings boys may attend church in Sheffield if their parents desire it; on week-day mornings and on Sunday afternoons there is a simple religious service at the School, conducted by the Head Master or visiting minister.

A Committee of nine, chosen each term by the school from among the older boys, cooperates with the Head Master in matters of discipline where the general interest of the school is concerned.

The School offers annually six full scholarships and two scholarships of five hundred dollars each. The recipients are selected not because of scholarship alone but on the ground of their promise as useful men.

The charge for Board and Tuition for the school year is $1550.

L. RALSTON THOMAS, Ed.M., Head Master.

Established in 1784, this College Preparatory School, under supervision of the Society of Friends, emphasizes the all-round development of Boys in an atmosphere conducive to earnest, thorough work.

The five-year Course of Study fully prepares for admission to any College or Technical School. Moses Brown maintains a high record in College Entrance Examinations. Classes are small so that the Individual needs of the Boy may be carefully met. At the same time he has the advantage of organized class groups. Lower and Upper Schools are separate units and operate independently in classroom activities and dormitories.

Moses Brown Boys engage in many interesting and helpful extra-curricula activities. Class Plays are produced under Faculty direction by students interested in Dramatics; a Declamation Contest encourages work in Public Speaking, the school Monthly Magazine and Year Book encourage Literary Talent, there is a School Orchestra for those interested in Music, and a Studio and Shop.

On an elevated tract of land with broad lawns and groves of trees, the School commands a view northward to the hills of Massachusetts and southward to the waters of Narragansett Bay, and is readily accessible to Providence.

The School has excellent equipment for Athletics, including extensive Playing Fields, Gymnasium and Swimming Pool.

THE ROXBURY SCHOOL, Cheshire, Connecticut.

A. N. SHERIFF, Head Master.

Roxbury has attained marked success in College Preparation by emphasizing the individual importance of each Student. Following are the salient features.

FLEXIBILITY OF ORGANIZATION.

Instruction is in small classes, usually approximating five Students. When advisable, Boys may be taught alone or in groups of two or three. Students' Programs are arranged and revised to fit their individual requirements and capacities, as determined by careful study. The aim is thoroughness, and speed; the methods employed, by elimination of aimless effort and by stimulation to intellectual initiative, resourcefulness, and enthusiasm, result in rapidity of progress.

WELL-ROUNDED TRAINING.

Daily supervision of each Boy is painstaking, but such as to encourage self-reliance, manliness, and self-respect, rather than slavish adherence to rules. Close contact with masters of understanding is used to arouse Students to a sense of their own inner power and to a willingness to assume responsibility. An important goal is the development of each Boy's potentialities of Personality.

Although non-sectarian, the School, in cooperation with Parents, practices a sympathetic attitude toward the maintenance of each Boy's religious observances, whatever his faith.

Physical Training is provided by the use of adequately equipped Gymnasium and Athletic Fields. Students all participate in healthful recreation, and a great majority engage in Competitive Sports under the instruction of competent Coaches.

Extra-curricular activities are maintained for the promotion of a generally healthful school spirit.

Canterbury School, founded in 1915, is a College Preparatory Boarding School for Catholic boys. It is conducted by a Corporation composed of prominent Catholic laymen among whom are Henry O. Havemeyer, Clarence H. Mackay, James A. Farrell, John D. Ryan, and Terence F. Carmody. It maintains the highest standards of discipline and scholarship, and gives a sound training in the doctrines and practices of the Catholic religion.

The Head Master and all the teachers are laymen. The chapel and religious services are under the direction of a diocesan priest appointed by the Bishop. The boys, from twelve to eighteen years old, represent the best type of American youth.

The school grounds, 135 acres at an elevation of 500 feet, are beautifully and healthfully situated, and provide space for Football, Baseball, Hockey, Track, Tennis, and Golf. There are three dormitories: North, built in 1928, Middle, renovated in 1926, South, built in 1927. A Gothic Chapel was finished in 1928. The Gymnasium (1924) contains locker-rooms, basketball floor, squash courts, and a 75 foot swimming pool.

The school enrolls 100 boys, and is remarkable for its excellent spirit of discipline and study, its pleasant and homelike atmosphere, its fine equipment, the character of its boys and masters, and its success in the College Board examinations.

BRUNSWICK SCHOOL, Greenwich, Connecticut.

GEORGE W. CARMICHAEL, Head Master.

A Preparatory School operated on the Country Day School plan, Brunswick gives a Boy excellent "all-around" training without sending him from home. Since its establishment in 1902 it has grown from a small beginning of fourteen boys to a school of nearly two hundred, and in that time has graduated boys who have entered and maintained excellent records in leading colleges.

A complete system of Primary and Secondary Education is offered, the twelve classes being organized into four divisions of three classes each—Primary, Elementary, Junior and Senior Schools. Each Boy is carefully studied and guided as an Individual. The teaching staff is made up of men and women long experienced in school work and it is very largely through their ability, earnestness and loyalty that Brunswick School has been built up.

A new Athletic Field, with a $\frac{5}{16}$ mile Cinder Track and 220 yard Straightaway, is equipped for Track, Football, Baseball and Archery. One of the largest private school gymnasiums provides for Fencing, Basketball and other Indoor Games besides the regular carefully supervised gymnastics.

THE MILFORD SCHOOL, Milford, Connecticut.

LAURENCE W. GREGORY, B.A., Head Master.

The Milford School thoroughly prepares boys for College Entrance Board Examinations. The regular session opens the last Thursday in September and continues through the June College Entrance Examinations.

The well equipped school buildings occupy an attractive estate in a typical old Connecticut town. The modern Gymnasium with its large Basketball Court, Boxing and Wrestling Room, the Six Tennis Courts, and facilities for Boating, Swimming, Baseball, Skating and Hockey provide for the physical welfare of Milford boys.

Because instruction is individual, or in small classes (never more than five in a class), each boy is taught at a rate suited to his particular mentality. This Individual Method of Instruction not only enables the boy to cover nearly twice as much ground as he ordinarily would, but it greatly increases the probability of success in the examinations.

The record of The Milford School is well known. References may be obtained from any former student, from any Yale graduate of the past twenty years, or from any Yale undergraduate.

Summer School prepares for fall college examinations and for removal of preparatory school deficiencies. Term begins fourth Monday in July. Boys may start work any time after that date if advisable.

Close relationship between the students and teachers develops a spirit of cooperation and promotes manliness in the boys.

MR. ASHTON'S, East Haddam, Conn.

HENRY S. ASHTON, Tutor.

Mr Ashton makes a specialty of training Boys to Study, this requires a highly developed technique and a considerable amount of impedimenta, which Mr Ashton is happy to show and explain, this is all tangible not etherial

Mr. Ashton builds individual textbooks for each Boy in each subject; this is compiled from day to day and has incorporated in it the errors and faults as they appear In this way a lad is trained out of his mistakes.

Mr. Ashton believes that a young man—on the threshold of an intellectual awakening—will be glad to find a happy, congenial, unconventional association free from athletic distractions and social diversions, where he can concentrate on making college in a year—a task that elsewhere requires two or three years to accomplish Frequently Mr. Ashton's Boys make the required fifteen units in one year.

Mr. Ashton prepares for Harvard, Yale, and Princeton.

Each Boy has his own bedroom and on the floor below his own private study.

References are to be had from the leading headmasters and from the length and breadth of the land.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL, Wallingford, Connecticut.
GEORGE C. ST. JOHN, Head Master.

The underlying purpose in the foundation of Choate was the desire to prove that the life of a family and the life of a school may be effectively combined, that a boy, while gaining the benefits that any good school must provide—efficient teaching, manly discipline, systematic exercise, and association with boys of purpose—need not lose the intimate, personal influence that should characterize his home—a genuine interest in his individuality, a friendly and compelling contact with maturer points of view, and an unconscious development in appreciation of all that “culture” stands for. Through the growth and organization of thirty years (twenty-two of them under the present Head Master), this has been the distinguishing ideal of Choate; and the School of today is planned, and the personality and character of its Masters hard sought, to give to its larger number of fellows both the same training and the same “atmosphere” that the Founders created for the four boys who made up the original school.

Above all, the School is unsparing in its efforts to strengthen in the boys’ minds high motives which shall control their lives.

THE MAIN BUILDING

HORACE D. TAFT, Head Master.

The object of the School is to give boys a sound training, physical, mental and moral, and to make them strong, manly and healthy men. A thorough preparation is given for any College or Scientific School.

The course of study covers five years, and it is very desirable that a boy enter as early as possible in the course. Twelve is the minimum age for the lowest class. Admission examinations are required in all cases.

The number of masters makes it possible for them to be in close touch with all the boys. A decided difference is made between the discipline of the younger boys and the older.

Religious exercises are held each day. Sunday morning school service is conducted by the Chaplain in Christ Church.

The School Instruction aims at more than thorough College Preparation. Classes are small enough to enable instructors to judge of the thoroughness of each boy's preparation of the day's work, to insist upon his best efforts, and to give him such supervision as is necessary.

Physical development is in charge of a regular master of the School, who has had special training and devotes all his time to it. All boys are expected to take vigorous part in athletics, unless parents request to have them excused. Football, Baseball, Basketball and Hockey, in each of which the boys form three teams, are part of the regular exercise of the School.

Recent endowment has made possible several additions to the school plant. A new infirmary and service building are completed and others, including dormitory, classrooms, library, and an auditorium, are under construction.

POMFRET SCHOOL, Pomfret, Conn.

HALLECK LEFFERTS, Ph B., Head Master.

Pomfret School holds one of the foremost places in the field of Secondary Education. It furnishes Sound Learning and Christian Education by instruction in all studies required for admission to University or College, but this particular objective is not its sole purpose. It develops throughout its Course thorough training for those planning to enter into active work upon graduation.

The Six Year Course of Study corresponds to the work offered in Junior and Senior High Schools. Applicants to the First Form should not be under twelve years, and must be prepared to pass creditable examinations in English and Arithmetic. Small classes, directed by able instructors who are all specialists in their subjects, make possible a maximum of personal attention and direction.

The extensive School Grounds have an ideal site in the country town of Pomfret. Full Athletic and Recreational Equipment provides for all Sports, Games and Physical Exercise in which each boy takes a vigorous part.

Friends of Pomfret School have recently provided generous means for its growth and equipment, making possible a beautiful Auditorium Building, Chemical and Physical Laboratories, a central Heating Plant and a rehabilitated Gymnasium.

Pomfret continues to carry out the ideal of its founder, that of fitting Boys to enter College or Business with the most sound background — mental, moral and physical.

KENT SCHOOL, Kent, Connecticut.

Rev. FREDERICK H. SILL, Litt.D., Head Master.

Summer Session

Kent School Summer Session, which was held for the first time in 1928, is primarily to give Boys an opportunity to make up their deficiencies in particular studies. It also affords an opportunity for Boys of superior ability to advance themselves a year, by taking new work during the summer.

The students enrolled need not be Kent boys, but they are admitted to cover work up to and including the Third Form, which corresponds to the first year in High School.

The Plan of Study provides for sections made up of new Boys already on the list of schools of their choice for admission the following fall, but who are deficient in one or two of the entrance subjects. Other boys do work of the Second and Third Forms.

Classes are small and the Faculty, specialists of experience, give Individual Instruction to Boys who need it.

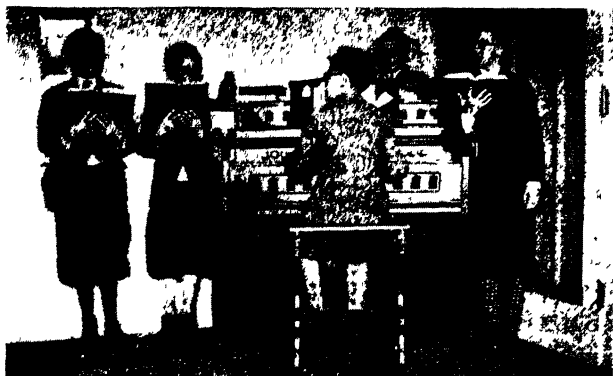

Afternoons are free for Outdoor Activities — Baseball, Swimming and Tennis. There are excursions to West Point and nearby points of interest, picnics and week-end camping trips.

Boys gain experience in the characteristic Kent self-help system. They are under the personal supervision of M. D. Nadal, coach of football, hockey and baseball at the school.

Enrollment is limited so that early application is necessary. Address Secretary Summer Session, Kent School, Kent, Conn.

Choosing a school,—the selection of the environment, of the personalities, that will profoundly influence a boy in the formative period,—is one of the most responsible functions parents are called on to perform

In questions of law, in questions of health, in matters of architecture, one would not think of committing himself to a definite course without expert advice.

The outlook, the psychological attitude, the intellectual slant, the associations and the character of a son are of more importance than the plan of a house or a clause in a will

But until recently parents have been obliged to decide with such advice as they could casually get from their friends or neighbors, and with incomplete information as to the advantages and opportunities the school field afforded

THE BROWN SCHOOL OF TUTORING,

38 West 69th Street, New York City.

FREDERIC L. BROWN, B.S., Principal.

For nearly a quarter of a century this School has maintained a record of rapid and thorough preparation for the leading Colleges and Secondary Schools.

At least sixty-five per cent of all the School's work is entirely individual and there are never more than two at a time with a teacher. As a result of this method nervous pupils are not embarrassed, bright pupils are not retarded by classes and the pupil cannot help acquiring the Art of Concentration.

The work of each pupil is accurately planned to satisfy the requirements of the School or College that he expects to enter. All school study periods are supervised. The School has twelve teachers, all college graduates with six to twenty-five years' experience, and each an expert in the subject he is teaching.

A Summer Session—July 7 to the College Entrance Examinations in September—is conducted in the school building in the City. Pupils may enter at any time, so that boys on their return from Camp may have two to four weeks of valuable training before their September examinations.

The location of Blair Academy in the Kittatiny Mountains of New Jersey within a few miles of the Delaware Water Gap, provides, from the standpoint of beauty, health, and outdoor activities, an ideal environment for a Boys' Preparatory School. The primary purpose of the School is thorough Preparation for College based upon standards represented by the College Board Examinations, with stress upon the development of self-reliance and sense of honor, preparatory to the freedom of college life.

The School is distinctly democratic, with a spirit of friendliness and a simple informal atmosphere. The creating of intellectual appreciation with a cultural background is a prominent factor in the life of the School. A wide choice of sports adapted to suit individual requirements and tastes offers opportunity for Swimming, Golf, and Winter Sports, as well as the more usual forms of athletics. The program of extra-curricular activities in Musical Organizations, Dramatics, School Publications and Camera Club is sufficiently varied to provide profitable leisure for Boys of many different interests.

The Junior School, for Seventh and Eighth Grades, meets the needs of the Younger Boys for more intimate contacts, (both in work and play), with experienced Masters, and serves as a transition between home and the dormitory life of the Upper School.

Blair graduates enrolled in leading colleges and universities are achieving successful academic records.

Rutgers Preparatory School has been administered by Rutgers University continuously since 1766 to afford boys adequate preparation for College.

The equipment is modern, complete, attractive. A plan of co-ordination enables the School to utilize valuable parts of the University plant at a great saving of expense, putting the academic and home life on a par with the best at moderate cost.

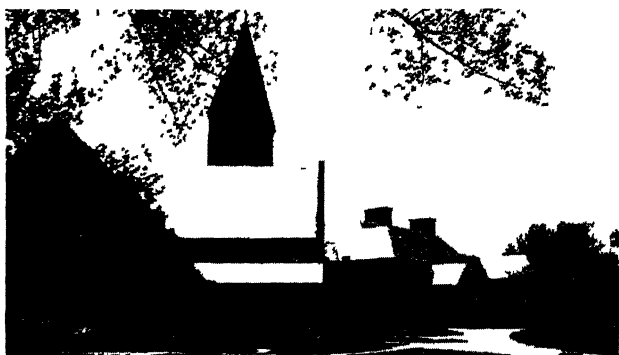

One hundred boys are accepted, selected usually after personal interview. Eight resident masters, all highly trained and experienced in developing character and self direction, as well as right methods of study, are in constant close association with the boys.

The student associations manage all social activities and some of the schoolroom discipline. An interesting social life is cultivated. All branches of Athletics, including Golf and Swimming, and other student activities outside the regular curriculum, are fostered and carefully supervised.

THE LAWRENCEVILLE SCHOOL,
Lawrenceville, N. J.

MATHER A. ABBOTT, M.A., Litt D., Head Master.

Lawrenceville is an endowed boarding school for boys, originally established in 1810 and reorganized in 1881 on the John C. Green Foundation. Its plan of operation is an American adaption of the English House system. The School is under the control of a Board of Trustees.

Lawrenceville is distinctively a College Preparatory School, and its graduates have entered practically all the more important Colleges and Universities in the country. Approximately sixty per cent of each graduating class enters Princeton and Yale.

The strong faculty of fifty-five Masters, graduates of leading universities, endeavor to combine physical, social, moral, and religious training with effective teaching.

The School property comprises more than four hundred acres of ground, with modern buildings and equipment.

There are thirteen Residence Houses, with accommodations for about five hundred boys. Every House is under the supervision of experienced resident Masters. The Upper House is reserved for eighty boys of the Fifth (or highest) Form. An Alumni War Memorial Building accommodates the one hundred boys of the Lower School.

Physical training is required of all boys and is supervised by specially trained Masters. The Gymnasium is near the Golf Links, the Running Track, the Playing Fields, and the Tennis Courts. In addition to School athletic teams, there are Junior and Senior House teams in all branches of sport.

A number of scholarships are available. Parents and boys should visit the school before making application.

AIRPLANE VIEW OF THE HAVERFORD SCHOOL

THE HAVERFORD SCHOOL, Haverford, Pa.

EDWIN M. WILSON, A M., Head Master.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys, nine miles west of Philadelphia, on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Haverford is in an exclusively residential suburb and educational center. The Haverford College campus adjoins the school campus. Bryn Mawr College is a mile distant.

The boarding department is limited to seventy-five, insuring to the pupils the advantages of individual attention and the guarded home life so difficult to secure except in a small school.

While the School aims at thorough general training it is distinctively a college preparatory school, and practically all its graduates enter college. They have had remarkable success in passing the admission examinations, and in maintaining high standing in the leading colleges and universities.

There are Six Forms in the School. The average age for admission to the First Form is twelve years. There is a Junior School of six grades, attended by day pupils.

The classroom instruction is in small groups and is supplemented by individual teaching for those who require it.

The School encourages and requires every pupil to engage systematically in some form of outdoor athletics. The open country about Haverford and the ample grounds afford opportunity for all sports in season: football, soccer, tennis, swimming, hockey, basketball, skating, track athletics and baseball.

The illustrated circular will be sent on application.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

CHESTNUT HILL ACADEMY, Chestnut Hill, Pa.
GILBERT H. FALL, B.A., Head Master.

The grounds, in the beautiful rolling country north of Philadelphia, eleven miles outside the city, are easily accessible.

The health record of the school is unusual, the facilities for physical training are excellent. All students are required to take exercise four afternoons each week under the direction of competent supervisors. The school is characterized by serious work amid homelike surroundings.

The day pupils receive all the advantages afforded to the boarding pupils. They spend the entire day at the school, taking part in the supervised afternoon study and organized athletics.

The Upper School comprises six forms. To enter the First Form a boy should be about twelve years of age. The courses of study are intended to provide the elements of a liberal education and to prepare candidates for any University or College. Classroom groups are small, which makes for close contact between students and teachers. Much individual instruction is given boys who have difficulty with their work. Chestnut Hill boys have had notable success in gaining admission to leading Colleges and Universities and in doing high grade work there after admission.

The Lower School is divided into six graded classes, covering the primary instruction necessary for entrance to the Upper School. To enter the Lower School a boy should be five or six.

A limited number of scholarships covering a part of the annual tuition charges are open to pupils of high character and ability, whose financial resources are limited.

THE TOME SCHOOL, Port Deposit, Maryland.

MURRAY PEABODY BRUSH, Ph.D., Director.

This endowed Preparatory School of national patronage enrolls more than two hundred boys from all parts of the country, preparing them to enter the leading Colleges and Universities, especially those that require College Board Examinations.

In Maryland, midway between Philadelphia and Baltimore, Tome is easily accessible. Its buildings, the work of the best architects and landscape artists, overlook the Susquehanna river.

The mild, even climate proves especially stimulating for the Tome program of earnest study and vigorous outdoor sports.

Under the faculty of twenty-four men, trained in American and European Universities and all specialists in their departments, six years of work are offered in two courses, College Preparatory and General. In the General Course, two years of Business Administration are offered and there are unusual opportunities for Mechanical Drawing, Manual Training and Shop Work.

Each boy is required to take an active part in athletics. The Gymnasium, Batting Cage, Athletic Fields, Cinder Track, Golf Course, Tennis Courts and a Swimming Pool provide every incentive for physical development.

Tome appeals particularly to boys who take a personal pride in upholding the prestige of one of the finest preparatory schools in the country. It appeals to parents who recognize the importance of environment, excellent equipment, a well balanced program of work and play, and masters who understand boys and give them sound college preparation.

IN THE CATHEDRAL CLOSE UNDER THE SHADOW OF THE NATIONAL CATHEDRAL

ST. ALBANS SCHOOL, Washington, D. C.

BISHOP OF WASHINGTON, President.

REV. ALBERT HAWLEY LUCAS, B.S., Head Master

St. Albans, the National Cathedral School for Boys, was established in 1909 by the gift of Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston, niece of President Buchanan and Mistress of the White House during his administration. It is part of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

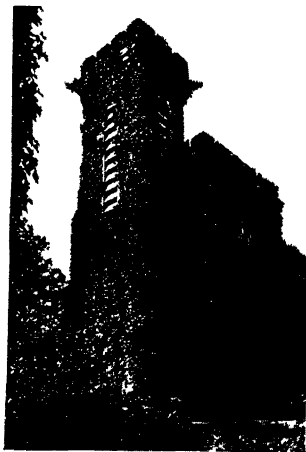

Four miles northwest of the Capital, in the Close with its 67 acres of Meadows and Woodland, St. Albans overlooks the City of Washington and beyond to the hills of the Potomac.

College Preparation is stressed in both Lower and Upper Departments,—not by cramming for examinations in the last few years, but by laying a broad and generous foundation in the early Forms and insisting on accuracy and thoroughness.

The Lower School in 1929 occupied a new building. It contains Classrooms, Art, Manual Training, Music and Play Rooms, Lockers and Showers, Masters' Apartments.

On the 10 acre Athletic Field are Football and Baseball Fields. In addition to Tennis and Outdoor Basketball Courts, the Younger Boys have their own Playing Field.

The school aims to turn unintentional Boys into intentional Men and believes this is best done by giving the Spiritual, Intellectual, and Physical sides of Life their proper values.

ELI SWAVELY, President.

Swavely is the school which won such a reputation as the Army and Navy Preparatory School in the days when special study was necessary for boys to pass the examinations to Annapolis and West Point. As conditions changed, more and more boys were prepared for college, and the school was named after the man who had founded it and had been principal for more than twenty years.

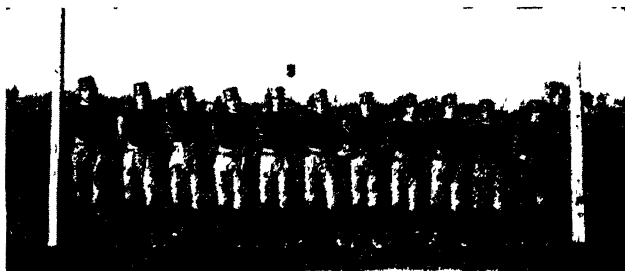

With the change came growth. Growth demanded new quarters. These were found in a country location thirty miles from Washington.

The equipment is modern; the campus, of sixty-five acres, the location, in the healthful, mild climate of northern Virginia.

Although a few boys are still prepared for Annapolis and West Point, College Preparation is the chief work. Graduates of Swavely are found in nearly every Eastern College and University. The school is accredited and its Certificate is accepted by all the Colleges that accept Certificates in lieu of Entrance Examinations.

Special attention is given to thorough preparation for College Entrance Board Examinations.

The place of Athletics in the development of the Swavely Boy is well emphasized. Swavely teams in Football, Baseball, Track and Basketball compete with other school teams. It is required that every Student shall enter into Games and Contests.

STUYVESANT SCHOOL, Warrenton, Virginia.

EDWIN B. KING, M.A., Yale, Head Master.

Established in 1912 to meet the distinct need for a school of highest standards yet restricted to a small enrollment for the sake of individual attention and development, Stuyvesant occupies a unique place among American schools

Ideal location in Piedmont, Virginia, in the heart of the fox-hunting country, has naturally given riding and hunting a foremost place in school athletic activities. Boys who have attained sufficient ability may hunt with the Warrenton Hounds. Team activities include football, baseball, tennis, boxing, and track. Frequent excursions for week-end trips to places of nearby interest, neighboring battlefields, the Caverns of Luray, peaks of the Blue Ridge, and the Shenandoah River, give an interest and zest for Outdoor Life and Camping.

Frequent trips are made in the school bus to Washington to visit the Houses of Congress, the government buildings, and the numerous museums and galleries for which the Capitol is famous; also to Arlington and Mt. Vernon.

WILLIAM OLIVER STEVENS, Ph.D., Litt.D., Head Master.

Cranbrook, a day and boarding school for boys, endowed by Mr. and Mrs. George G. Booth, is in a northerly suburb of Detroit. It is the largest unit thus far developed in the cultural group consisting of five schools and a church, for which these donors have provided by gifts totaling $13,000,000

Instruction, which is primarily for college preparation, is offered in all grades from seventh to twelfth. Teaching is directed toward developing boys individually. Personality has been a basic consideration in the selection of the faculty, which averages one instructor for every ten students.

The school occupies a beautiful, hilly site of 75 acres, containing a small lake. Natural facilities, added to extensive playgrounds, football fields, tennis and handball courts, and track, encourage year round sports. Athletics are planned to reach every boy, and all coaching is done by instructors, who work, play and live with their pupils. A resident physician and nurse, with a fully equipped infirmary, take care of the students' health. Design and adornment of all buildings fulfill the donors' ambition to provide for education in an inspiringly beautiful environment.

Cranbrook School is affiliated with the Episcopal Church but aims at a religious and moral atmosphere in no way sectarian.

This School, in the Baboquivari Mountains, is surrounded by cattle country and looks out over the Altar Valley towards the beautiful Sierrita Mountains Tucson, the nearest railroad connection, is 52 miles northeast and is accessible by automobile.

Fresnal was started in 1924 as a Ranch for young Men and Boys needing a change from the strenuous life of College and City. Each Boy was given a certain amount of physical labor in order to keep himself fit and create an interest in the life. In 1928 a Tutor was added to the staff for Boys who cared to continue with their school work.

Once again in 1929 the policy was changed and Fresnal Ranch became a fully established School with six forms of class work in preparation for College; a staff of Competent Masters, and a group of healthy fellows carrying on regular school work.

Riding, Shooting and Camping are the chief Outdoor interests, and impromptu Football, Baseball and Hikes are organized by the Boys. The Ranch has an excellent Tennis Court which is in great demand at all times. Pack Trips are taken over two or three days around the neighboring ranches and countryside, and automobile excursions are made to all the points of interest in the Southwest. The Boys see as much as possible of Western Life.

BRENT SCHOOL, Baguio, Mountain Province, Philippine Islands.

HAROLD C. AMOS, A.M., Head Master.

Brent School, first known as Baguio School, was founded in 1909 by the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D D, then Bishop of the Philippine Islands, in order that American and European residents of the Orient might have the advantages of a first-class Christian Education for their Sons without being compelled to break up their families by sending the Boys back home. A Girls' School has been conducted since 1925.

The 7 School Buildings stand in a beautiful wooded 28 acre Campus in the Benguet Hills. Although only 17 degrees from the Equator, its 5000 foot elevation makes Baguio a popular pleasure resort. Its Climate is probably the most Healthful for Children in the Far East.

A sound Classical Training and thorough Preparation for American Colleges and Universities are stressed. The standards are those of the good U. S. College Preparatory Schools.

The Toddler (as young as 8), Middler, and Senior Boys have separate Dormitories. On a Hill a few hundred yards away is the attractive new Girls' Building. The Food is American and wholesome. Well equipped Infirmary with a Graduate Nurse Athletics are encouraged and Intramural Contests are held weekly. Dramatics and Boy Scout activities are also featured. Religious Instruction is part of the regular Course of Study.

THE BEST SCHOOL FOR YOUR GIRL

WHICH IS IT? WHERE IS IT?

It may have been the best school for your neighbor's daughter but perhaps Your Girl is entirely different

Perhaps it takes a different type of woman to handle Your Girl, to understand her, and to succeed with her.

Does Your Girl need suppression or does she need drawing out, pressure or encouragement, the competition of numbers or individual attention and help?

Does she need snubbing or a dose of hero-worship?

Does she need efficient teaching, individual tutoring, sympathetic encouragement, or hard driving?

Not Any School will supply all these, but there are some that will afford one or the other.

Selecting the Environment in which she is to shape herself, to form her habits, to make her friends, is a portentous task.

Your Wisdom or Your Failure will do much to determine the type of woman she is to be

Is not the Selection of a School just as deserving of Expert Advice as the Making of a Will?

ISABEL B CRESSLER
CAROLINE L SUMNER } Principals.

On a commanding site north of Greenfield, Mass., among 150 acres of lovely parkland, a fireproof homelike building was erected during the summer of 1930. This was especially designed to house the activities of two well-known nonsectarian New England Schools.

Prospect Hill was founded in 1869 and continued as an important local institution until 1909.

Stoneleigh was founded in 1909 as Elmhurst, in Eastern Indiana, and in 1926 took a place among New England Schools in a rented property at Rye Beach, New Hampshire

The merger of the two Schools brought together interesting traditions and unbroken continuity of activity. The school home accommodates 48 pupils and a faculty of twelve with the pleasant relationships of a large family.

Junior College, College Preparatory, General and Special Academic Courses are offered, covering seven years of work.

The Music Department is under the direction of Felix Fox of Boston who gives a personal lesson monthly to each pupil.

A special studio and a workshop for creative activities, with instruction by experts in Drawing, Designing, Painting, Modeling and Sculpture, furnish cultural inspiration which is supplemented by illustrated lectures preparing for intelligent travel.

The Estate includes fields for every desirable outdoor sport, a private stable, riding ring and bridle paths for the Stoneleigh Riding Club, vegetable and flower gardens and scientific care of woodland, orchard and trees.

The Mensendieck System of Physical Training is taught. "This eliminates all use of Gymnastic apparatus and teaches how to control deliberately, by the mind, the actions of the body." The Athletic Association develops a strong morale through its demands for a high type of group responsibility during all non-academic hours.

A GUIDE FOR PARENTS

Parents often feel the need of help in placing their children in the right private school Usually they go direct from the Handbook to the schools or camps of their choice. Sometimes they write Mr Sargent for further advice

"Quite by accident I recently heard of your Handbook of PRIVATE SCHOOLS and today it reached my desk. I have just been reading its Editorial Foreword and found it so fascinating that I fear I have neglected a number of important hospital matters this afternoon" H L F, Danville, Pa

"I have been interested in looking over your book, PRIVATE SCHOOLS, and have been wondering if it would be possible to obtain some more direct and specific information from you" Mrs J. W. O, Sound Beach, Conn

"I am interested in finding a small school, somewhere in the East, for my son I have a copy of your Handbook on PRIVATE SCHOOLS but it is difficult to locate a good school for so young a boy." B S, Ithaca, N Y.

"I have recently purchased your book, PRIVATE SCHOOLS, 1929-1930, as I am looking for a school for my daughter eleven years old" E. N. S., New York City.

THE SPENCE SCHOOL, INC.,
22 East 91st Street, New York City.

HELEN CLARKSON MILLER, Head Mistress

The Spence School is a day and resident school for girls that has enjoyed an excellent reputation since its establishment in 1892 by the late Clara B. Spence. In September 1929 the School moved into its new building on East 91st Street, overlooking Central Park.

The teaching staff consists of forty trained specialists for the enrollment of over two hundred girls. The classes are small, careful attention being given to the individual pupil.

There are two Academic Departments in the School. Preparatory and Collegiate, a high standard of scholarship is maintained. Preparation for College is emphasized. There are two courses: the College Preparatory Course given only to girls actually registered for college, and the General Course which includes a wider range of cultural and practical subjects and also leads to the School Diploma.

There is an organized Department of Music for the resident pupils through which all music lessons and practice are arranged. Pupils may study Piano with either the resident teacher or her associate, or may in special cases select their own teachers, Vocal or Instrumental. The girls who sing enjoy weekly chorus work in the Glee Club.

The School offers opportunities for its students to become familiar with the best things New York has to offer in the way of music, art, lectures, museums, philanthropic undertakings, and places of historic or current interest.

An Athletic Association is developing greater interest in Physical Education. The difficulty of providing exercise in a large city is met by Riding, Gymnastics, Fencing, Tennis, Swimming and Basketball. The afternoon program of each resident pupil is planned with care. The school buildings are light and sunny.

Both during school hours and in the home life, the School emphasizes the development of character as well as of intellectual quality, insisting on reliability, obedience, courtesy, and the poise gained by the pupils in carrying responsibility. The atmosphere is friendly but the discipline throughout the School is strict.

The Alumnae of The Spence School are organized as an incorporated society of over one thousand former students, who conduct a definite philanthropic work in New York City.

MOUNT VERNON SEMINARY,

Nebraska Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Miss JEAN DEAN COLE, A. B., Head Mistress and President of the Board of Directors

Mount Vernon Seminary, founded in 1875 by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Somers, was incorporated in 1916, and since 1918 has occupied its new Georgian buildings on a thirty-three acre estate, twenty minutes from the center of the national capital.

The two-story fireproof building, which accommodates 135 students, has the atmosphere of a beautiful, commodious Home.

Extensive grounds provide facilities for Tennis, Field Hockey, Basketball and Archery, the School has a large, tiled Swimming Pool, and proximity to parks offers opportunity for Riding. An Open Air Gymnasium permits a year round program of Outdoor Gymnastics and Athletics.

The School offers a six-year course—four years of High School work, both General and College Preparatory — and two years of College work.

Music and Fine Arts are given an important place in the curriculum, providing special advantages to students desiring to specialize in these fields. A three-manual Skinner Organ in the Elizabeth Somers Memorial Chapel offers an opportunity for organ study. There is also a department of Home Economics furnished with special equipment. A Field House under the direction of the Department of Home Economics provides social and recreational facilities.

The two-year Advanced Course, though modeled on the Junior College idea, does not limit itself to the traditional courses of the first two years of a Liberal Arts College. It provides Individualized Work of College Standard, built on the tutorial plan, and stresses the educational value of Extra-curricular Activities.

In this Collegiate Division, the experience of Directed Leadership is made a definite part of each student's education. Advanced standing has been granted to students in leading Universities when the course is especially planned for that purpose.

The school property is an estate of sixty acres adjoining on one side the edge of the village and on the other a large farm. The six buildings set on a hill have a fine view east and south.

A basic routine is maintained but there is plenty of work and play in interesting variety. The children's activities include care of the household, gardening, care of trees, care of ponies, making maple sugar, building a log cabin, and building and sailing ice boats and sail boats.

The Health of the children is a major consideration. They sleep out of doors, the food is simple and wholesome.

The Grounds provide ample facilities for Skating, Coasting, and Games. The children are kept up to their grades in academic subjects and are thoroughly prepared for secondary school work.

Mr. Sargent and his staff are prepared to advise parents in regard to European schools for their sons and daughters.

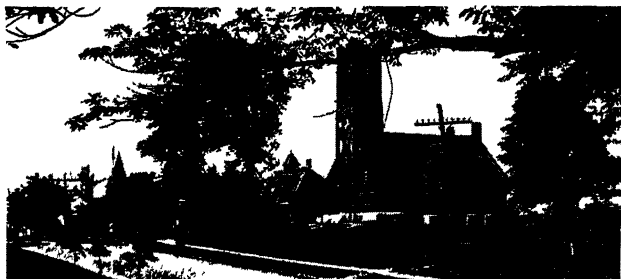

A mother, whom we had advised, writes. "I visited S—— but gained the impression that it was deriving its pupils from the impetus it had received from the founders who doubtless were real educators.

"E—— seemed a homelike, pleasant place, but again all the pupils were Americans. I went to see F—— at L—— and was particularly impressed by the fine character of Dr. and Mrs. S——. It is from my gratitude to you for bringing the school to my attention that I am writing you so at length.

"I am now confronted with the problem of choosing a boarding school for my seven year old daughter. The essentials for her are plenty of fresh air, sunshine, good food, and a French milieu. I would like her not to hear a word of English. Therein lies the difficulty, I know, because the French send their children either to the Lycées or the Catholic schools, where the sanitary conditions are unspeakable, judging from those I have investigated,—dormitories with a hundred children and not one window open! No butter or milk at meals, but always wine! One wonders how the French nation persists."

Write full particulars as to your children and their needs and Mr. Sargent will help you to find what you want.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF DALCROZE

EURYTHMICS, 9 East 59th St., New York City.

PAUL BOEPPLE, Director.

A complete musical education is to be had within the walls of this Institute—Solfege (ear training, sight reading), Harmony, Counterpoint, Piano, Singing, Violin—all based on and starting from Rhythmic Movement, the most potent element of Art. To attain an inner understanding of it one must give both mind and body to a study of its various forms. And more, one must live Rhythm as an intimate, personal experience.

Jacques-Dalcroze, a Swiss composer, discovered this 25 years ago when no one considered it necessary to study rhythm. His aim was to fill a need he felt in musical education, but soon he realized that others needed this education as vitally as the musician—the actor, dancer, and educator—in fact, everyone should study rhythm as it is a fundamental principle of life.

There are classes for Children, Students' and Professional Courses, and a Teachers' Course. The demand for teachers in this country exceeds by far the supply. Dalcroze work offers young college and music students opportunity to enter a new profession which is creative and inspiring. Today in the U. S. about seventy-five Music Schools, Universities and Colleges hold classes in Dalcroze Eurythmics.

PARK LODGE SCHOOL FOR AMERICAN BOYS, Pau (Basses-Pyrenees), France.

HENRY A. DRESSER, Ph.B , M A., Head Master.

This Boarding and Country Day School combines a typical American School Program with the opportunity to learn French and to travel. The Lower School prepares Boys for the large American Preparatory Schools, Upper School for C.E.B Exams.

Winter Sports on week-end trips in the Pyrenees and Vacation Trips, conducted by a Master, to the Sahara, Provence and Spain are interesting Features. American Boy Scout Troop YORK HOUSE, a preparatory and finishing school for English speaking girls, became affiliated with Park Lodge in 1929 and is directed by Mlle. Cledou, long experienced in work with girls.

INSTITUTION SILLIG, BELLERIVE,

La Tour de Peilz, near Vevey, Switzerland.

MAX SILLIG DE VALLIERE, Principal.

Bellerive, on the northern shore of Lake Geneva, has acquired international fame since its founding in 1836. The winter term, December to March, is spent in a modern building at Villars-sur-Bex, a winter resort of French Switzerland.

Excepting special preparatory classes, tuition is in French. Boys are prepared for the American C.E.B. Examinations held annually in Geneva.

Pupils admitted from 9 years of age, but Day Pupils over 13 are not accepted. A few American Boys are enrolled. Excellent references in the United States.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston.

DARTINGTON HALL SCHOOL, Totnes, Devon, Eng.
WILLIAM B. CURRY, M. A., B. Sc., Director

In September, 1931, Dartington Hall School, which has been in operation in a small way for the past four years, will be reorganized under the direction of William B. Curry, who has been Head Master of the Oak Lane Country Day School in Philadelphia since September, 1927. Mr. Curry was formerly Head of the Science Department at Bedales School in England.

Dartington Hall School will be operated in connection with the 3000 acres of the Dartington Hall Estate, which is being used for research and experimentation in rural industries. The School, which will be mainly a Boarding School, will be in three departments—a Primary group for Children from two to eight years, a Junior School for Children from eight to twelve, and a Senior School for Children from thirteen to eighteen. For the first year or two, attention will be concentrated on the Primary Group and Junior School, it being hoped that the Senior School will be created out of the Junior School as the students grow up.

New buildings are being erected for the Primary and Junior Schools, but the Senior School will be situated in the beautiful 14th Century courtyard which is the old Dartington Hall Manor.

The School has ample financial support, and will aim at being a demonstration of the most modern, liberal, educational practice. It will be international and non-sectarian in its outlook.

SUMMER CAMPS

SUMMER CAMPS

The following Select Directory is a representative but not complete list and includes only those camps that responded to letters offering them the opportunity to be here represented. The invitation was not extended to all and not all accepted.

The HANDBOOK OF SUMMER CAMPS, 8th edition, 1931 ca 800 pages, with maps and illustrations, sold at $6 00, is revised and lists many camps not included in earlier editions.

Mail inquiries in regard to summer camps, clearly worded, will be answered, advice given and booklets furnished without charge.

A blank form on which to indicate exactly the kind of camp wanted will be sent on request.

For extended correspondence or investigation and for personal consultation a fee is charged those who are able to pay.

CAMP MERRYWEATHER, North Belgrade, Maine.

HENRY RICHARDS, Director,
Gardiner, Maine.

Established in 1900, Merryweather has always maintained its high standards. Boys are taken on personal recommendation only. The enrollment is limited to forty.

The councilors are all college men, and several of them are affiliated with such schools as Groton, Milton, and St. Paul's.

The purpose of the camp is to give the boys sympathetic understanding under home and family influences, and athletic training without outside competition. In shell-rowing and canoeing they are coached by college crew men.

CAMP KINEOWATHA, Wilton, Maine. Elisabeth Bass and Anne Louise Bass, Directors, Wilton, Me. Camp Kineowatha, founded in 1913, offers girls from 8-20 a summer of camping in the Rangeley region. Kineowatha Tutoring Camp, founded in 1920, offers expert tutoring to girls preparing for College Entrance Examinations, to those wishing to make up lost work or to specialize in some subject. Write Miss Bass at Wilton, Me., for illustrated booklets.

LONG LAKE LODGE, North Bridgton, Me. Edwin V. Spooner, Phillips Exeter Acad., Exeter, N. H., and George W. Hinman, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., Directors. A summer tutoring camp for older boys. During the past twenty-nine years over a thousand boys have been tutored at the camp. A large majority have, by their summer work, saved a year in their preparation for college. Thirtieth season opens July 13, 1931. Early application necessary.

DETAILED CLASSIFIED LIST

SCHOOLS TO MEET SPECIAL NEEDS

These lists are intended to be helpful in finding the type of school desired. Occasionally arranged chronologically, the usual arrangement is geographical, enabling one to select immediately schools of the type desired in any particular section of the country. The lists are not intended to be exhaustive, but to include only the more representative schools under each classification.

BOYS SCHOOLS

PREPARATORY TO THE LARGE EASTERN COLLEGES

The total number of candidates from each school who took College Entrance Examinations for the last four years is given. Only those schools are listed which have sent up at least ten boys during this period.

PROFESSIONAL AND VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS

MUSIC SCHOOLS

There are thousands of Music schools in the United States. They are estimated at 17,000. Many with impressive titles occupy a single rented room. Only a few of the better established and permanent institutions are here listed.

The conservatory system was established as early as 1853 by Eben Tourjee in Boston. Harvard was the first college to establish a music department — 1862. Now almost every college and preparatory school has its department of music. Secondary schools with separate music departments are found in the Classified List of Secondary Schools.

ART SCHOOLS

The study of Art as an accomplishment for young ladies was an early 19th century development. As early as 1791 Charles Willson Peale endeavored to create a school of art in Philadelphia. The attempt, though unsuccessful, led in 1805 to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Nearly a hundred art schools in the country now offer courses of from one to four years. Summer art schools are a popular recent development.

KINDERGARTEN TRAINING SCHOOLS

The first kindergarten for English speaking children was started in Boston by Elizabeth P. Peabody in 1860. The first in this country was conducted in German by Mrs. Carl Schurz in her home in Watertown, Wisconsin. The first kindergarten training school was organized in Boston in 1868 by Madame Mathilde Krieger and her daughter. Miss Marie Boelte opened a similar school in New York City four years later.

The earlier schools, as many are to this day, were supported by kindergarten associations and these private training schools turn out more kindergartners than do the state normal schools. The journals of the International Kindergarten Association are published in the interests of the profession.

SCHOOLS OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION

The development of interest in Physical Education in America dates from the middle of the last century. It is true that as early as 1823 Dr. Charles Beck introduced German gymnastics at the Round Hill School, Northampton, Massachusetts. But the important influence came twenty-five years later, in the intercollegiate contests in rowing, the calisthenics of Dr. Dio Lewis, and the educational journals. The college gymnasium was an immediate result — Harvard and Amherst being for first place in 1860.

There are at present fourteen independent, well established, and reputable schools of Physical Education. In addition practically all the large universities and many of the smaller colleges have well organized departments. These two types of schools supply many of the private and most of the public schools with trained directors.

SCHOOLS OF EXPRESSION

Schools of Speech Arts are developments of and take the place of institutions formerly called Schools of Oratory and Elocution. The modern Schools of Speech avoid these terms and designate themselves variously as Schools of Expression, Schools of Public Speaking, Schools of the Drama, and Schools of the Stage. Under Schools of the Theatre Arts are Schools of Stage Production, Schools of the Little Theatre. Closely affiliated with Schools of Expression and Public Speaking are those remedying defective speech.

SCHOOLS OF THE DANCE

Schools of the Dance are, in America, a recent development. Many aim directly or the stage, offering courses in classic, folk, national, interpretive, ballet and general stage dancing. Others have their origin in Schools for Physical Education and have as their purpose physical upbuilding and beautifying of the human form. Still others, more modern in tone, are for those seeking relaxation.

BUSINESS AND SECRETARIAL SCHOOLS

The number of schools of this type reported by the United States Bureau of Education in a recent pamphlet was six hundred in 1924, a loss of some three hundred since the previous compilation, due to the great increase in the assumption by the Public School Systems of the functions once performed by private institutions. Of the more ephemeral so-called "business colleges" there are probably upwards of 2000 conducted under private initiative, but these seldom make reports to government questionnaires.

Private business classes existed even in Colonial times. In the '30's and '40's of the last century private classes in bookkeeping increased rapidly, forerunners of the modern business schools. In the '50's and '60's chain schools were established, remnants of which exist today independently in many cities under the old names.

The leading schools here described are also mentioned in the main body of the Handbook. In these lists are some schools not described elsewhere. Business departments of standard colleges are not included.

SCHOOLS OF NURSING

Professional nursing is a relatively modern development. It was Florence Nightingale who first uprooted the old notion of nursing as charity work. Nursing education in America had its start in the form of lectures, when Dr. Valentine Seaman introduced a lecture course in obstetrics at the New York Hospital, but no school of nursing existed until 1873. Three schools initiated at this time were independent organizations cooperating with, but not established by, the Bellevue Hospital in New York, the Connecticut Training School in New Haven, and the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Hospitals immediately recognized the value of these training schools and, though in 1880 there were only fifteen schools, in 1890 there were thirty-five, in 1900, 432, in 1920, 1775, in 1926, 2155 and by the end of 1927, 3286. In 1928 new recruits to the ranks of graduate nurses numbered about 20,000. A committee from the Medical Association of America, the College of Physicians and Surgeons and several other important groups, including professional societies of nurses themselves, in 1928 investigated and reported that "most hospitals with training schools expect and require student nurses to carry the entire nursing load of the hospital." Some of the larger hospitals still maintain a staff of graduate nurses, and the nursing education which has found its place on the program of many colleges is of course on a high plane.

Only a few of the older and better established nurses training schools are presented under the following classifications

FOR DEFICIENTS

Under this classification will be found schools for the mentally, physically and sensorily deficient. Defectives received no scientific care and education in this country until 1820, when idiots were admitted to the deaf and dumb asylum at Hartford, Connecticut. Dr Edouard Seguin, a young French physician, developed a method of training of the sense organs and in 1850 opened the Seguin Physiological School at Orange, New Jersey. Before that, however, his methods had been used in the first strictly private institution in the country, Elm Hill, Barre, Massachusetts, which dates back to 1848. Latterly schools for the slightly deficient have developed and many of these admit no low grade defectives.

REENERGINIZING EDUCATION

ENCOURAGING GROWTH

We do not know all about growth yet. The best we can do in 1950 is to adapt and make conditions favorable for the growing organism. We have not yet learned about the child as much as the gardener of a century ago knew about garden truck, that each growing thing flourishes best with certain specific foods under certain sets of conditions. To the individual belongs the great task of these growing years. The young of Homo, the conscious child, must familiarize himself with the world into which he has been thrust, with the people out of whom he has come, and with the possibilities his brief span of life offers. As far as the child is concerned, the only function of those who have gone before, ancestors, parents, martyrs, saviors, scientists—the archaeologist and the geneticist—is to help him to his understanding of himself, in his prying into the future.

As in any growing organism there may well be pruning when we know how, but any gardener will tell you that not all growing things are to be pruned in the same way. It is a bold spirit that will cut ruthlessly. We have less courage in 1950 than we had a century ago.

THE DEAD HAND

The one thing that we helpers of the coming generation will chide ourselves for is any unhealthfulness that comes over this growing thing. The 'dead hand' shall not control, ruthlessly it is thrust back. We look upon each individual as a new experiment, a new creation of God's, with new and partly unknown potentialities. Freedom to grow, to manifest individuality, is the first of our birthrights.

The greatest waste of youth in the past was due to internal friction caused by attempted adjustments to the traditional, educational, and institutional folkways. The great waste up to 1940 was not merely due to lost time or energy but to the so-called mental hygiene cases.

FILLING OUR ASYLUMS

Dr. Haven Emerson in his 'Mind in the Breaking' in December 1930 pointed out that 'in a population of 120,000,000, we probably have 4,500,000 children under five years of age with some behavior problem which, if not noted and in some measure dealt with, will lead to personal or family dilemma or disturbance. At the present time one out of every twenty white boys of fifteen years of age in New York State will be admitted to a hospital for mental disease during his lifetime, and another one in twenty will develop a psychosis or a severe incapacitating neurosis

CROWDING OUR PRISONS

'Again, more than 500,000 men, women, and children, one person among each twenty-four of the population of the United States, pass through our courts into jails, prisons, and institutions each year, among whom two-thirds of the delinquent or so-called criminals are found to be mentally disordered or defective, and to a great degree suffering from conditions preventable by means that are included in the resources of mental hygiene. Increases in prison and reformatory populations have followed the same trend, total inmates rising from 66 6 to 84 1 per 100,000 between 1923 and 1927. In the United States today 450,000 people are social liabilities because of mental disease, 500,000 more are in prisons and reformatories, 1,000,000 more fail of being social assets because of a low level of intelligence.'

PAYING THE PIPER

By the end of 1930, the time which Dr Emerson wrote about, the financial cost and the burden on the community was tremendous. In 1930 in Massachusetts one-twelfth of the state's whole income went to pay for the institutional care of those that could not be provided for at private expense and one-twelfth of the national income went to pay the crime bill. This was but part of the waste of our civilization which was based on our traditional educational system.

WE MUST ABOLISH FEARS

Dr. Emerson on the eve of 1931 wrote 'If we can abolish the fears, which paralyze action, freedom, self-expression, and freeze out the happiness of childhood, we shall have done a service incomparably more memorable than the triumphs of bacteriology in the past half century.'

Understanding of the importance of mental hygiene has come very rapidly during the past thirty years. Mental hygiene cases now in 1950 have become relatively rare. Just as soon as we understood its importance and its costs, it was a simple thing to eliminate the cause and prevent the result. Adherence to harmful ideals, traditions and institutions had produced internal friction that resulted in burned out bearings. Recognition of the individual, his internal needs and urges, training in right habits, has resulted in individual health and an improvement in the collective health of society. It is strange that it took so long to realize that a sound whole could not be built up of diseased parts and that the fundamental cure for social ills was to reduce the number of mentally and physically unhealthy individuals.

We did it, and this doing away with the need for penal and remedial institutions and establishments has been an astonishing accomplishment in so short a time. But it is no more than we Americans have accomplished in the past when our attention had been concentrated upon a need.

THERE IS HOPE FROM OUR PAST

In 1800 you recall, there was hardly a road in the whole country, within twenty years turnpikes ran everywhere straight as arrows from center to center. In 1830 there was not a railroad, in twenty years the country was a network of them. In 1900 there was hardly a paved road; in twenty years they covered the country. Aseptic surgery, once the need was revealed, came immediately. What had been ordinary practice became a crime.

The cost? Yes, it has been tremendous just as it was in those other innovations. But think of the saving in railroads over canals, and paved roads over mud. Now we have saved the cost of our former institutional system, mental and penal, which cared for the wrecks of our formalized schools and our broken homes. The time, energy, resources and wealth so released are now free for creative and constructive works.

In a century we have brought our engines, steam, internal combustion, Diesel, from eight to eighty per cent efficiency in the transformation of internal energy into useful work. Similarly our educational engineers are bringing the child and youth, organic machines for the transformation of energy into useful work, to higher and higher efficiency. A generation ago when we graded an individual pupil '70% in history,' for example, this indicated the percentage of the total knowledge he was supposed to have absorbed which he could exude on examination. Now in 1950 we grade school systems and school engineers in percentages based on the amount of useful work developed from the energy given off.

EDUCATION MUST BE REENERGIZED

The re-energizing of education, the elimination of waste, is not all that has been accomplished in these twenty years between 1930 and 1950. The whole metabolism of each individual has been hitched up to the educational habit-forming process. Of the energy inevitably and continuously given off by the human machine which was formerly wasted or exerted harmfully, the new methods of 1950 are directing an ever increasing percentage into useful habit-forming channels.

INDEX OF FIRMS AND AGENCIES

A Permanent Educational Exhibit is maintained in our 13th floor offices, 11 Beacon Street. Here school executives may consult architects plans of recent or proposed construction and see demonstrated the latest ideas and appliances for schoolroom and library use. In the Model School Office are exhibits of office furniture, equipment devices for duplicating, dictating, recording, and accounting.

In the Outdoor Exhibit, on the adjoining roof terraces, one will find suggestions for the playground, the camp and the outdoors generally

A file of catalogs of firms dealing in supplies and equipment for schools is maintained in this office. School executives are invited to make use of these and our extensive file of information in regard to firms which are in a position to serve the schools.

We will gladly answer inquiries in regard to where any particular service or equipment may be obtained.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

250 Park Avenue, New York City

Each issue is read in more than 2,000,000 American homes. The selection of a school for the child invariably means a family discussion. Mother, father and prospective student debate the merits of the schools considered. The family decides. The School chosen is the one which has won the support of the majority of the family.

Many independent surveys by impartial sources prove The American Magazine "First with all The Family."

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. Average cir over 130,000.

EDUCATIONAL EXHIBIT

*In the Penthouse and on the Two Adjoining Roof Terraces
13th Floor—11 Beacon Street—On the Top of Beacon Hill
These Permanent Educational Exhibits have been Established*

ARCHITECTS EXHIBIT

Since November, 1930, more than 100 of the leading architects of the country, including Charles A. Platt, Charles Z. Klauder, Cram & Ferguson, Eliel Saarinen, have had on display plans, drawings, perspectives, models, floor plans, blue prints, photographs of new or projected Private School construction. This is for the benefit of those interested in Private Schools and is without cost to the architect except for installation.

THE PERMANENT EDUCATIONAL EXHIBIT

Designed to present the newest and best ideas in school-room equipment and schoolhouse construction—ideas in seating, lighting, flooring, office devices and furniture, geographical, scientific and laboratory apparatus, athletic and sporting goods, visual instruction equipment, music, telephone equipment, entertainment material, etc.

THE OUTDOOR EXHIBIT

In our 11th floor offices, the walls of the entrance halls and reception rooms are used to display photographs:

April, May and June—Photographs of the better Summer Camps, activities, sites and equipment.

July, August, and September—Photographs of selected Private Schools and school activities

Motion pictures of camp activities are shown Fridays through May and June, in the large exhibit room, 13th floor; of school activities—Fridays in September or by appointment.

Other exhibits are arranged for the remaining months.

The Key to CHICAGO'S SCHOOL MARKET

Private School and college advertisers can reach 440,000 better class homes—homes which contribute a majority of Chicago's private school and college students—through Chicago's Home Newspaper, The Chicago Daily News. More than 95% of these homes are in Chicago's 40-mile metropolitan area.

Advertisers are extended the services of The Chicago Daily News school and college bureau, to which 10,705 persons applied for information last year.

Educational Counsel for Parents

1500 parents annually call on Mr. Sargent for help in solving their educational problems.

Seven members of staff assist, each in his own field,—
Boys, Girls, Special Schools, Summer Camps, etc

Information and Catalogs supplied wherever possible.

Inquiries by mail, on properly filled out blanks (sent on request) which do not entail extensive investigation, can usually be answered gratis.

For consultation or extended correspondence and investigation, a suitable professional fee is charged those who are able to pay.

NO FEE OR COMMISSION IS EVER ACCEPTED FROM A SCHOOL OR A CAMP for any boy or girl registered through the influence of this office. Consequently we are free to render unprejudiced advice.

SUMMER CAMPS for Boys and Girls,—those who run them and the ideals that actuate them are equally well known to Mr Sargent.

The blank form on page 1216 will facilitate complete understanding of the case, and make possible diagnosis and helpful advice.
